TOC Chemtrails - Something you can do

by Jon Logan

By this point, if you haven't heard of chemtrails, then you must have been living in a cave somewhere. Chemtrails. Lines in the sky, drawn by aircraft.

Lab tests of samples collected from chemtrails have been reported to contain many toxic ingredients. It appears that there are at least 2 main kinds of chemtrails, and the most common by far is an aerosol mixture of oil, powdered metal (usually barium or aluminum) and powdered quartz. The other kind(s) have been reported to contain desiccated human blood cells and virulent bacteria. Fortunately, I have never seen the second kind where I live. They are the ones that form 'spider webs' in the sky which drift down and are deposited on the landscape. More common by far is the sight of an airplane, usually white, which leaves a streak of white vapor behind it that hangs in the sky, and / or spreads out to form a haze which covers the sky from horizon to horizon. The clouds in some cases become dark and overcast, in others they flee and vanish as drought sets in. The sky has a silver haze to it like smoke. Under some lighting conditions, the Chemtrail haze creates rainbow circles in the sky as sunlight is refracted by the layer of oil suspended in the atmosphere.

Many people experience health problems as a direct result of chemtrails. Difficulty breathing, sudden flu-like symptoms, and intense headaches are commonly reported. For more information on the Chemtrail phenomenon you can visit www.educate-yourself.org or just google 'chemtrails' and you will find many websites dedicated to the analysis of chemtrails, describing the phenomenon in much greater detail than it is the purpose of this article to do.

In fact, this article assumes that you have already heard of chemtrails. If you have, and have looked into it, then you will probably know already that some people are doing an excellent job of raising public awareness on the subject. Of course, if that effort is to have been to any purpose, then someone somewhere has to actually do something about it. Nobody seems sure exactly what to do about it, though. Until now, that is.

Maybe one day mass protests in the street will end the international spray project, and the people at the top who are responsible for it will fess up and explain everything. But in the meantime, there is actually something that you can do, and it is relatively simple. It has been repeatedly proven to produce results, and it will produce results on a scale commensurate to your effort. Interested? Read on.

The main adverse effects of chemtrails are environmental contamination (especially with heavy metal toxicity), adverse health effects to biological life, and aberrant weather phenomena. These problems all respond to treatment with Orgone technology and / or Radionics. Something you can actually do about chemtrails is to build a Chembuster, and install it somewhere near your home.

A Chembuster is a device which uses Orgone technology to stabilize the weather patterns of a localized area. It was invented by a man named Don Croft about 5 years ago. It has been repeatedly observed to clear the smog created by chemtrails and to take much of the energy out of violent storms. In some areas it has been repeatedly observed to cause the break in a long standing drought. Overall, its effect on the area of its use appears to be, in a word, balance. If an area is afflicted with drought then the Chembuster will tend to increase precipitation and the formation of clouds in its area. If the area has violent storms or an excess of rain, then the Chembuster will tend to diminish the violent weather patterns and stabilize the local weather within a microclimate extending for a few miles in all directions. These effects in some cases manifest dramatically at the moment of the device's installation, but for the most part appear gradually and steadily over a period of months and years.

A Chembuster has many similarities to a Cloudbuster. A Cloudbuster is another Orgone tool which is used to modify weather patterns.

Cloudbusters were invented by a man named Wilhelm Reich about 70 years ago. They work by moving large amounts of Orgone, and the Orgone in motion causes changes to the temperature and movement of air. Since it can change the way the air moves and how warm or cool it is, it produces changes to weather patterns. A Cloudbuster requires that you know something about weather patterns, and something about Orgone energy, and have some degree of humility in its use. Otherwise, it creates problems in the wrong hands because it is a powerful piece of technology which can alter weather patterns.

A Chembuster is like a Cloudbuster in that it moves large amounts of Orgone around in a predictable fashion. But it is different in that it changes Orgone from one form to another. A Cloudbuster is designed to be used by a person, consciously directing the tool to produce a desired result. The Chembuster is designed to respond to changes in the Earths Orgone field and be self-regulating. So far, I and many thousands of other people around the world have found it to be just that... safe.

When installed, the Chembuster processes Orgone in such a way as to harmonize the energy. It removes accumulated Radionic data and breaks up stagnant Orgone energy, gets it circulating again. It circulates Orgone energy and processes it as it does so. Additionally, it changes the speed at which it allows energy to circulate in response to local changes in the Earth's Orgone energy field. These functions may seem complex, but the engineering is relatively simple. In layman's terms, the device is installed, and then becomes part of the Earth's Orgone field, acting to augment the Earth's natural ability to 'heal itself'. This has the demonstrable result of beneficially affecting the health and emotional morale of human beings, stabilizing violent weather patterns, and reducing or eliminating the haze associated with chemtrails.

Back in the early days many of us were concerned that Chembusters would cause the heavy metals from the chemtrails to accumulate and concentrate near the device. There are persons now who still say that this is the case, but I disagree, based on my experience. After 3+ years, I have seen nothing to support this view.

So what happens to the metals then? I am not entirely certain. I think that a certain amount of them are in some way rendered inert by the aetherochemical effects associated with Radionics (www.littlemountainsmudge.com/Radionics.htm). Whether the toxins in the aerial spray are deposited elsewhere and filtered out in the water cycle, or whether the toxins are transmuted into harmless elements by the action of the Orgone energy, the fact is that it certainly seems to be cleaner around here since I started using the devices. We seldom if ever have days when the air literally smells of Chemspray, but this used to be common, before the Chembusters were in use.

We still get sprayed, but the haze doesn't hang for near as long, if at all. The drought we had experienced for several years has diminished with each successive year since I started using the devices in my area. In fact, this year it looks like there will be enough water in the river I can actually take the canoe out for a spin.

Build one, you can get the info for free on the web, and you don't have to be know what you are doing or be humble to use it. You can be a jerk, and it will still work. Heck, imo the guy who invented the Chembuster IS a jerk, FWIW. The technology still works.

This may seem anticlimactic if you were expecting an article about the exact chemical composition of chemtrails, or about the latest sightings, or a compilation of data and documentation proving that chemtrails exist. You can get that for free on the web, just use google.

But if you want to actually make a difference in your life, you can build one of these devices for 50 to 250 USD, and start cleaning up the mess. It's an array of metal pipes, parallel but not touching, a few inches apart. The pipes are held parallel by a dielectric disk with holes cut in it to form a spacer. One end of the pipes are open. The other end of the pipes have a short piece of plastic hose stuffed inside the pipe. A small quartz crystal is nestled inside the hose, and the end of the pipe with the crystal is covered with metal tape or a metal end cap. Each of the 3 to 10 pipes is done that way, open on one end and the other end is covered with a metal cap, inside the end with the metal cap is a small crystal wrapped in dielectric tubing.

The pipes are assembled into a parallel array, and the end with the caps is cast into a big chunk of MHD Orgone Matrix Material. That's it. I have tried many variants and they all work, though the relative size of the components can make the device either more or less efficient. I recommend viewing the original specs, (which are public domain btw). You can find them on this page:

http://www.metatech.org/Cloudbuster_&_Orgone_generator.html

I and other experimenters have found that many components of the basic design can be successfully varied, the design is actually quite forgiving and adaptable.

Here's a little about how Chembusters work - The pipes act as an Orgone antenna, and to some degree as an Orgone vacuum tube. They pull Orgone through from end to end. Also, the copper pipes act as a conventional EM antenna and therefore are able to assist the device in attenuating EM pollution.

There is a small quartz crystal inside one end of each pipe. The crystal acts as a lens to focus the energy so that a higher rate of flow can be achieved in the pipes, and to some degree acts to carry Radionic data concerning the function of the device.

Between the quartz crystal and the inner wall of the pipe is a dielectric layer. A chunk of garden hose or tubing works well for this and is convenient. This both isolates the quartz from the pipe electrically and acts as an Orgone vacuum tube (organic tube inside metallic tube) and speeds the Orgone through. This gives a strong flow bias to the pipe, inducing the energy to flow towards the end with the crystal. This is basic Orgone dynamics, many Orgone beamers are built using this principle and have been for decades.

The end (with the crystal) is then covered with a metal cap and connected to a large body of Orgonite. The Orgonite absorbs energy, pulling the energy in as the pipes push it out. The energy builds up in the pipes, the pressure (charge density) rises until it pushes through the metal cap and flows into the Orgone matrix material. When the Orgonite is connected to the Earth, the energy flows from the Orgonite into the Earth. As the energy flows through the MHD or HD Orgonite, it is processed by the Orgonite and harmful properties are removed. The pipes induce a large flow of energy, and the Orgonite cleans and balances the energy as it passes through.

As long as the Parts are of correct size in proportion to each other, the device will work dependably and with little or no maintenance. The overall energy storage potential of the Orgonite base should be at least 3 or 4 times the overall energy storage potential of the pipes. This will ensure that the energy flows from weakest potential (the pipes) to strongest potential (the Orgonite ballast at the base of the device) under normal circumstances.

As a rule of thumb, you could say that with MHD Orgonite If your pipes are six to eight feet long and .75 to 1.5 inches diameter, you need 2 to 3 gallons of Orgonite. If HD, then 1.5 to 2 gallons for the same pipe lengths.

All in all, I have to say that Orgone tech applied to the problem of environmental pollution has proven more effective for me than any amount of petition signing I have done ... ever.

Things aren't completely normal, the world is definitely changing. But I've been 'gifting' (using Orgonite tools for environmental healing) for about 4 years now in this area, and the results have been intriguing. The smog often forms up in a wall abutting the area where the devices are installed, and you can observe that the sky on one side of the line is grey and oily, and on the other side the sky is clear with scattered puffy clouds and the haze from the chemtrails is absent. This 'hole' has taken the form of a long ellipse which runs out to the northwest and southwest for many miles, and shrunk to the point of disappearing at times, only to reappear within a few days at most, always in the same general area. There s no regular rhythm to the opening and closing of the hole, it appears to be in response to changing weather conditions.

Chembusters and TBs, when deployed together, generate a geostable Orgone environment which manifests measurable and benign changes to the weather patterns in the area of their use.

Below are some more points of view from folks who have had the time and metaphysics expertise to form a substantive opinion. For more information about TBs, small devices which perform the same healing action as a Chembuster on a smaller scale, visit www.littlemountainsmudge.com/info.htm .

TOC My Orgone Adventure

By CinTex the OrgoneWizard

As a Pisces, I have always been a dreamer and believer, and as such, have always had a strong attraction to all things occult. I am the type of person who has always seen the Magic in Life at all times. Growing up in Texas, I fought off the conservative mindset by spending most of my youth inside an imaginary world filled with the spectacular and unbelievable. By the time I had reached my teen years stories of Paul Bunyon and Pecos Bill evolved into tales of Bigfoot, the Bermuda Triangle and UFO's. In school, the abstract world of Math led me to the "Ideal" world of Plato, and Philosophy became my first and foremost avocation.

About 14 years ago a book came into my possession, The Golden Dawn, by Israel Ragardie. This book contains information about initiatory Magic, and at the time, it was completely over my head, however one thing did stand out during my initial cursory purview, that being, only one book is labeled, "a must have." The book is, The Function of the Orgasm, by Wilhelm Reich. Admittedly, seeing the word Orgasm helped highlight this in my mind, yet it was the way Regardie italicized the word, must, that really engrained the recommendation into my psyche.

Four years later, I found myself on the West coast in a used bookstore and lo and behold, right before my eyes was that very book. I snatched up that copy and read it on the flight back home. To say that I endorse, The Function of the Orgasm, would be a massive understatement. This book became my introduction into the world of Wilhelm Reich.

Becoming familiar with the life of Wilhelm Reich is an education in itself and should be pursued for this alone. Here was a man who grew up in the Austrian countryside, and fought in the First World War. After the War he was an early student of Freud, still known as the Father of Psychoanalysis. Reich explored Freud's theories on the Libido and discovered ways to observe this energy in both humans and in nature. Reich called this energy, Orgone, and believed it was the fundamental energy that dives all of Creation. Reich's theories where not popular in Hitler's Germany, and his books were among those burned in huge piles for "incorrect thought." Reich was forced to flee from the German Empire during the Second World War and after some time in Norway came to America where he built a laboratory in Rangeley, Maine. At his lab, Reich's exploration of Orgone led him to the fantastic worlds of Weather Control, the curing of cancer, Zero Point or Free Energy and even UFO's. These later discoveries were not very popular among mid 20th century Americans and in a haunting repeat of his youth, Reich's books were burned, right here in the USA, by the Federal Food and Drug Administration, and Reich himself was placed in prison where he died in 1957.

I did not think about Reich and his discoveries again until the late 90's. At that time I began to observe the phenomena commonly called "Chemtrails" and instinctively knew that these chemtrails where not natural, nor were they beneficial. I really started to pay more attention to the skies and what was going on above us all. Soon it was obvious that these chemtrails, (probably in conjunction with HAARP and or GWEN), were having serious effects on the atmosphere and the surrounding environment. Most notably, in my area, the chemtrails were drying out the local atmosphere and causing drought like conditions. This could easily be seen as stringy clouds that could not hold their cohesion and there was an obvious graying of the sky, a "perpetual haze" if you will.

I have lived in Austin for quite some time now, and even though Texas is known for its high temperatures, Austin itself sees on average two or three 100F degree, (37-38C), days each year. In fact, in 1997 Austin had only one day at or above 100F degrees. Then in 1998, Austin experienced 37 (by some reports up to 47) such days. Over a four-year span from 1998-2001, Austin averaged over 27 days a year with 100F or more of heat. The straw that broke the camels back for me however, was in 2000 when there was a reported 55 days with 100F heat. I started to think and pray about ways in which the average person could help alleviate the situation and my thoughts and prayers lead me back to Reich and his work with the Cloudbuster.

A traditional Reich Cloudbuster is like an Orgone cannon. It creates an etheric vacuum drawing in Orgone energy from the atmosphere. Cloudbusters are very powerful and can affect the weather over an area of 100's of miles. They also attract and pool negative energy while in use. After a few months of research and hours of discussion with some others who had experimented with Cloudbusters, I decided that I did not know enough about them to build one and use it responsibly. Then in October of 2001, a friend emailed me an article about a man named Don Croft. Don had designed something he called a Cloudbuster. I scanned the article but rejected it when I realized that this was not a true Cloudbuster of Reich design. However after another month or so I actually read the article completely and once I realized how easy these Cloudbusters were to make, I trusted in the ways of the Universe, and built the first of what I call "Chembusters". A Chembuster is for all practical purposes, a large, directional Orgone harmonizing devise. Orgone has two basic aspects, OR, which is positive and life affirming; and DOR, (Dead OR), which is negative and life negating. These two contradictory forces create the very fabric of the Universe, through which all the phases of Life are played out; birth, growth, death and decay.

The modern Croft Orgone devices work to balance to OR and DOR within a given device's range. They technically do not create energy, but work to bring the energies into a harmony in which all Life may thrive. Chembusters transmute negative DOR energy into positive OR energy up in the atmosphere. You can feel the results immediately and unlike the Cloudbuster, the modern design does not attract DOR energy and is completely safe to use. Since the Chembuster does not blow holes in the atmosphere and only works to achieve a balance, it never has to be turned off, making it hassle free as well. The best part, as I mentioned before, is that the Chembuster is very easy to make.

I built my first Chembuster on March the 6th of 2002 and over the next six months some friends and I had placed over 15 Chembusters in and around the Austin area. The effects were immediate. Within days the oppressive, heavy ambiance, which could be seen quite often in Austin as smog, began to disappear. The grey hazy skies returned to a deep blue and the clouds began to resemble the "cotton ball" shapes I remember from my youth. In 2002, the first year of Austin "Chembusting," the number of days over 100F was down to two and in the three years of operation, the average number of days in Austin over 100F has been three per year.

Besides the obvious corrective effects that Chembusting was having on the atmosphere, the observant could see the positive changes in other areas of the city. People have started going outside more, the swimming holes are keeping their water throughout the summer, and most importantly, the rain has come back to Austin. The aquifer that supplies this area with water had been so low in the years leading up to 2002, that this area was under a strict water-rationing program. Restaurants would only bring you water if you asked for it and washing your car was considered taboo. The rainfall last year was twenty inches over average and the aquifer is now at a healthy level.

In 2002-3 I was very vocal and active in the new Orgone movement. I helped network with others across North America and even the world to place Chembusters at various locations. A pioneer of sorts, I developed the first Orgone wands and have been concentrating on those items in the past year. With the city and the surrounding area experiencing a period of healing, I too have been able to enjoy the process of healing and growth. Being in close proximity to Orgone devices of all kinds I am constantly being challenged to heal myself at all the various levels of being. Lately I have been spending a lot of time developing my Spiritual nature and I am quite certain the abundance of positive OR energy that surrounds me helps to facilitate this process.

I have been fortunate to be in the vanguard of the new age of Orgone devices and the experiences I have gained will last me a lifetime. However, none of it would have been possible without the pioneering spirit of Wilhelm Reich and the inspiration of Don Croft, two men which I will always hold in high esteem. ©2005 Cintex

TOC Pioneering Orgone Technology

by Mark and Suze Hooten

Our experience with Orgone energy began when we discovered the Yahoo forum for Cloudbusters back in April of 2002, thanks to a crystal supplier, Gladys Bridges. At that time we were drawn to Gladys's boji stones and collected them whenever possible. We have a little "village" of them. Charlie Bridges personally found the Dow crystal Mark carries with him. It is his favorite.

We had wanted to build a CB long before that, however Don Croft was not releasing the plans at the time. He did that, eventually, and in May, 2002, we introduced our newly designed CB. It was officially named "Hooten's Rainbow Warrior" because of a spectacular sunbow (colorful halo around the sun) that occurred the day of its installation which made the headlines of the Miami Herald. We are northwest of Miami. We nicknamed our CB "Big Daddy." Several CB'ers said it was probably caused by Chemtrail soup, but it was not the same as that. Very distinctive, not soupy.

Marks CB design veered from the standard instructions in that it contained a seven-pipe configuration which included a middle pipe as well as Orgone technology's first introduction to coiling minerals within devices. Mark included an elaborate coiled array of quartzes around the pipes which are within the level of the resin/metal matrix. He included pyrite, garnets, hematite, and citrine as well. The addition of a citrine wand and lots of coiling around the inside-pipe quartzes finished it off with a bang. [Instructions available on our site]

The effects were phenomenal. The 5 year drought ended that May and we had some deluges, even though typically April and May are our driest months of the year. The Chemtrail sludge cleared as well, and for the first time in months we saw blue skies all day. Before the CB, the CT (Chemtrail) spew boys would have a white out developed by afternoon.

Our methods were nicknamed "hootenization" by Dragon Al way back then. The name seemed to stick, and when forum members used our methods in their HHGs, CBs, etc. they would say they "hootenized" them. That is why we named our business hootenization.com. Mark's innovations sparked a movement of coiling "mania" that continues today. We give complete instructions on how to make a Hooten CB on our site. We like to share instructions and advice when we can.

After CB installation, there were as many or more CTs, but they cleared right away, and were unable to make that horrible milky soup in our skies any more. Never again in three years have we had a white out or a drought. Although on some days when the HAARP is heavy, the CT's get pulled out and seem to cloak the skies with a thin, filmy haze, but it lifts soon enough. So it makes us feel good that even though the CT boys are doing their best to implement weather controls, that we also have some control.

Last summer, after our area had a 44 year break from any Hurricanes, we had three in a row. During the approach of these storms, we found that aiming the CB directly toward the trajectory of the storm caused them to stall and change course. In fact, for the record, we stalled Hurricane Francis off of Miami for a total of 18 hours, even though it was originally headed directly at us. It veered away instead by nearly a couple of hundred miles (and ended up making landfall in decidedly less populated areas than it would have affected had it remained on the track predicted by the national hurricane service)....The same is true also of Hurricanes Charlie and Ivan.

Charlie was 1st, and also the most powerful and threatening of the three. Although it was a very damaging storm, before we aimed the CB, it was headed right for the mouth of the Caloosahatchee River, which is less than a mile from our home. This would have caused a devastating surge for both sides of the highly populated river neighborhoods. The storm re-routed itself to a less densely populated area and did wind damage, but not much flooding. We have a Hurricane Charley scrapbook posted on our site. It is quite interesting. You may want to go see it sometime.

A heavy, rainy, May, is an indication that no hurricanes will come here this year. For the past 121 years since they've been keeping track, no hurricanes have ever hit SO. FL when the preceding May has had heavy rainfall. They've only happened here following a very dry May.

www.loohan.com/

(FYI, the very reliable psychic, Sylvia Brown predicts that the Carolina's won't be so lucky this time around, though that's nothing new for that area of the country)

We have had interest in designing smaller OR tools as well. Mark also developed a core coiling method for the quartzes that has appeared in the HHGs and many other of our items. He dubbed it a "reactor core" and we believe that term has also stuck. It proved very effective. We put tutorials on our site as to how to build them that way.

Mark also developed a method of including various minerals other that the ones listed above. He made a couple of small tools to act as environmental purifiers.

These are the EZAP and the EVG. Mark configured what he called "activation chambers". This is a method of coiling in which a mineral is placed within the 2 conjoined SBB (spiral) coils utilizing a tourmaline crystal as an amplifying diode. [See our how-to on EZAP's to get the idea].

These little tools have proved quite effective. Mark placed some in certain naturally occurring power-points in the Everglades recently, and despite the predictions of a summer drought here, we are already breaking rainfall expectations for May.

We have made lots of friends from around the world. Our tools span the globe at this time. Our customers are happy and most always come back for more products eventually. We have placed some of the nice comments received on several customer comments pages.

All this makes us feel that we are on the right track. Although there has been one person in particular who we need not name here, who has attempted to discredit us, we think our results, and that of our customers', speak for themselves. His actions also speak for him.

It is more than obvious to us that the influence of our devices as well as many of the others offered today, have had a profound and positive effect upon our environment (which was the reason we began this venture to begin with), and upon the well being of those whom have been able to experience them.

We hope to continue to serve for a long time in the future. It has been a rewarding and enlightening experience so far.

The Pope vs. Moishe TOC

About a century or two ago, the Pope challenged the Jewish community of Rome to a debate. The Jews looked around for a champion who could defend their faith, but no one wanted to volunteer. It was too risky. So they finally picked an old man named Moishe who spent his life sweeping up after people to represent them. Being old and poor, he had less to lose, so he agreed. He asked only for one addition to the rules of debate. Not being used to saying very much, he asked that neither side be allowed to talk. The Pope agreed. The day of the great debate came. Moishe and the Pope sat opposite each other for a full minute before the Pope raised his hand and showed three fingers. Moishe looked back at him and raised one finger. The Pope waved his fingers in a circle around his head. Moishe pointed to the ground where he sat. The Pope pulled out a wafer and a glass of wine. Moishe pulled out an apple. The Pope stood up and said, "I give up. This man is too good. The Jews win." An hour later, the cardinals were all around the Pope asking him what happened. The Pope said, "First I held up three fingers to represent the Trinity. He responded by holding up one finger, to remind me that there was still one God common to both our religions. Then I waved my finger around me to show him, that God was all around us. He responded by pointing to the ground, showing that God was also right here with us. I pulled out the wine and the wafer to show that God absolves us from our sins. He pulled out an apple to remind me of original sin. He had an answer for everything. What could I do?" Meanwhile, the Jewish community had crowded around Moishe, amazed that this old, almost feeble-minded man had done what all their scholars had insisted was impossible. "What happened?" they asked. "Well," said Moishe, "first he said to me that the Jews had three days to get out of here. I told him that not one of us was leaving. Then he told me that this whole city would be cleared of Jews. I let him know that we were staying right here." "And then?" asked a woman. "I don't know," said Moishe. "He took out his lunch and I took out mine."

TOC Has The Philosopher's Stone Been Found?

By Aurum Solis

Several researchers in the field of orgonomy including Life Technology Research International (www.lifetechnology.org/) and Jon Logan have been using various exotic materials in the manufacture of their Orgonite. One such exotic material worthy of special note is ORMUS.

These newly discovered materials have been called ORMEs, monoatomic gold, white gold, white powder gold, ORMUS, m-state, AuM, microclusters, and manna. David Hudson calls the materials he found Orbitally Rearranged Monoatomic Elements or ORMEs. He also refers to them as monoatomic elements in a high-spin state.

It is claimed by many users of our Alpha Matter ORMUS Orgonite enhancer that there is a noticeable improvement of Orgone output in ORMUS enhanced Orgonite mixtures. We conducted several tests to verify these claims and did discover that the ORMUS enhanced Orgonite material did in fact generate ten times more Orgone. Several clairvoyants described the new material as having a larger field with a variety of colors and having a more radiant nature.

It appears that these effects can be ascribed to the monatomic elements present in the mixture. They behave in this fashion because they are in such a finely divided state and are therefore capable of much faster attraction and repulsion of Orgone. Much more research needs to be conducted in this field to realize the great potential of this fascinating substance.

An Introduction To ORMUS - In March of 1988, David Radius Hudson filed U.S. and worldwide patents on eleven Orbitally Rearranged Monatomic Elements, ORMES, which he discovered in a form not previously recognized. David Hudson is a fourth generation Arizona farmer who became interested in extracting gold and silver from the tailings of old mining sites near his farm.

In the late 1970s David noticed some very strange materials as he was doing some gold mining on his land. Hudson spent several million dollars over the following decade figuring out how to obtain and work with these strange materials. In 1989 David Hudson was granted patents on these materials and methods for obtaining them. When David began the recovery process he soon found that gold and silver were being lost because of the buildup of a powdery substance referred to as "ghost gold" by many miners and metallurgists. Hudson's curiosity led him to work with spectroscopists at Cornell University and other labs to discover the elemental ingredients of this powder.

Initial findings of the sample yielded iron, silica, and aluminum. Further extraction of these elements left 98% of the powder intact. The surprise was that this 98% consisted of nothing which could be identified through normal spectroscopic analysis. Hudson knew that this "nothing" could be seen, felt, tasted and weighed. It had to be SOMETHING and he was determined to find out what IT was. In the course of his research he found a paper from the Soviet Academy of Sciences stating that proper spectroscopic analysis requires a 300 second burn instead of the 15 second burn used in the United States.

Utilizing the Soviet technique of fractional vaporization, Hudson discovered that his sample contained the elements palladium, platinum, ruthenium, rhodium, iridium and osmium. Even more astounding was his discovery that each of the nonmetallic elemental forms was a superconductor, a substance which allows an electric current to flow without resistance even in the absence of a continually applied potential.

Hudson continued his research and found four papers by the U.S. Naval Research Facility showing that cells of living tissue communicate with each other by a process identical to superconductivity, but the nature of the superconducting substance was unknown. On a hunch, Hudson analyzed the brain tissue of pigs and cattle and found the brain dry matter weight was 5% rhodium and iridium! As a result of Hudson's research, he knew that the electrons flowing through a superconductor pair off and are converted to a light frequency in the process. He theorized that this might be the same process occurring in human cells. Hudson discovered papers published by Bristol-Myers-Squibb Laboratories and others which indicated intense experimentation was being done utilizing precious elements in the treatment of cancer. These elements were shown to interact with the cell by a vibrational frequency or by light transfer to correct the mutant DNA. When Hudson applied his proprietary method of analysis to Essiac Tea (an alternative treatment for cancer), he discovered high levels of rhodium and iridium. He also found that Acemannan, a derivative of the aloe vera plant currently being tested on AIDS patients, is 90% rhodium!

David Hudson's life took an abrupt turn in 1990 when his uncle brought him a Time-Life book, "Secrets of the Alchemists." The goal of the alchemists was to make a white powder of gold that would serve as the container of the "light of life". This search for the white powders has been termed the search for the philosopher's stone. Encyclopedia Britannica says: "The stone, also referred to as the 'tincture' or 'powder'... was allied to an elixir of life... Inasmuch as alchemy was concerned not only with the search for a method of upgrading less valuable metals, but also of perfecting the human soul, the philosopher's stone was thought to cure illness, prolong life, and bring about spiritual revitalization."

There are many mysterious and magical things that have been recorded in history. The Biblical manna, the Philosopher's Stone, the Fountain of Youth, Orgone energy, prana, chi, the Holy Grail, the Great Pyramid and the Ark of the Covenant are a few of these things. It looks like these things and more might be related to a new class of materials that have been identified and described in the last few decades.

The materials that David Hudson discovered appear to be related to superconductivity, quantum coherence and Bose-Einstein condensates.

The ORMUS or m-state materials are thought to be the precious metal elements in a different atomic state. These elements, with the exception of mercury, are listed in Hudson's patents.

All of these m-state elements are quite abundant in seawater. They also seem to be present in most rock, fresh water and in the air. According to David Hudson's research, these elements in their m-state may be as much as 10,000 times more abundant than their metallic counterparts. There also may be other elements that occur naturally in the m-state.

Various researchers, working independently, have identified these materials in this different state of matter. They have arrived at many of the same observations. These m-state elements have been observed to exhibit the quantum physical behaviors of superconductivity, super fluidity, Josephson tunneling and magnetic levitation. It looks like these are an entirely new class of materials. These m-state elements are also present in many biological systems. We believe that they may enhance energy flow along the acupuncture meridians and in the microtubules inside every living cell.

It appears that this state of certain of these elements has been known throughout history. Several of the procedures for extracting or making ORMUS have been adapted from ancient alchemical texts. We believe that the Philosopher's Stone and the Biblical manna may be variations on this state of matter.

Some recommended alchemical texts related to the Philosopher's Stone are "Sacred Science" by R.A. Schwaller De Lubicz and "Le Mystere des Cathedrales" by Fulcanelli. Another source is "Occult Chemistry" by Leadbeater and Besant. The premier treatise on the subject may be "The Secret Book" by Artephius.

There is evidence that the m-state elements are associated with the "dark matter" that astronomers look for in space, the Earth's magnetic field, healthy soil, weather phenomena like lightning and that they are essential minerals for all life on Earth.

Certain properties of the m-state materials seem to be related to consciousness itself. A number of methods for obtaining the ORMUS elements have been devised in the last several years. The easiest of these methods is to raise the pH of clean ocean water to 10.78 and no higher, using lye water, then wash the resulting precipitate three times with distilled water. It is our firm belief that, once it becomes widely known, the discovery of the ORMUS materials will be heralded as the greatest scientific discovery in human history.

ORGONE MATRIX MATERIAL SHOP

TOC Foreword

by Steven Dainis

A few years back I found out how combining resin, metal & Quartz crystals and burying that matrix of material near a fake cell phone tower would neutralize the adverse affects they radiated out of those towers. It had been a month-long process of inner turmoil that eventually resolved itself with the decision to empower myself. Making this matrix of materials in specific ratios and configurations has become a science unto itself, though a very young science indeed! Shall we agree to some name now or in the near future on what to specifically call this new META-science?

I have preceded science with "META" because my experience with this new material creating process is a META-endeavor that has been nothing short of a Metaphysical magical mystery tour! So many things are related to this stuff it used to boggle my mind how encompassing this material was. It turned out that the common denominator is simply MIND. My individual mind was changed by this material, and making and placing this material changed my reality in undeniable ways. My physical body changed. People changed. This metropolis changed. Politicians changed. Crime rates changed. Attitudes changed. And it all is still changing, along with me.

Specifically what changed in me and in my mind was that practicing basic Huna prayer execution was speeded up tremendously. It used to take at least 20 minutes of just deep-breathing to get a good manna charge built up in my body. Then, I had to do some more meditation techniques & internal exercises that would take at least another 20 minutes. And, another 5 to 10 minutes for the actual prayer and/or ritual. That was a total of AT THE VERY LEAST 45 minutes from start to finish! Today, what used to take me that minimum 45 minutes now take 2-4 minutes!! Manna charge buildup takes 1 minute. The 20 minutes of meditation it used to take to alter my brains frequency takes about 10 seconds to a minute. Focus of mind and intent is laser-like and precise, so forming and making a prayer and/or ritual takes less than a minute also. This has been the greatest and most valued, yet unexpected surprise about making Orgonite-creations!

I got into making this stuff to neutralize the ill side-effects of the fake cell-phone towers. I ended up being a better and faster practitioner of every metaphysical practice I have tried, and a much more efficient Huna practitioner.

TOC EXD Orgone Matrix Material and High Volume Discharge

by Jon Logan

When I first started making Orgone Matrix Material, I was using curly shavings and making what I now call MHD. That was, and is, an interesting kind of material. It's really good for Passive devices, like the TBs and HHGs which are often made from it.

EXD is at the other end of the spectrum. In XHD Orgone matrix material, the particles of metal are up to 1mm or so in diameter. In EXD, with metal particles of microscopic size, the material takes on markedly different characteristics than the MHD with which many are now becoming familiar.

XHD and EXD are much more efficient for use in power driven Orgone generators than MHD. They require some form of energy input in order to generate energy, but they are far more efficient at doing so than MHD, which is better for passive roles.

The density of the matrix determines the amount of Orgone resistance that the matrix affords. It also determines the maximum charge density the matrix will store, and the minimum charge density required for the matrix to become active.

Once the Orgone Matrix Material absorbs enough Orgone energy, it reaches a critical threshold of internal charge density that causes it to begin processing energy. In the image to the left, the blue lines represent the areas where Orgone may flow through the matrix, and the white flashes represent the areas where energy is generated or converted from one form to another.

In XHD Orgonite, the rate of flow is low because the blue lines are constricted tightly and have to go around many corners. But the overall energy output is high because the charge density is high.

In EXD Orgonite, the density is so high that it takes much longer to absorb enough energy to become active. In fact, the density is so high that the material will go through an interesting series of stages before it is 'ready to use'. It will first absorb energy , and draw surrounding energy towards it. As the charge density increases, it will gradually start to radiate energy out from its surface. Then, it will continue to absorb energy until it 'plugs up' and stops absorbing energy. At this point it will feel very sluggish and condensed, and the rate of flow through the matrix will be almost nothing. It may form a skin of frozen Orgone or DOR around the surface of the material. Don't worry, this is temporary.

Once the EXD material has reached this state, it will respond dramatically to stimulation. When stimulated, the thin film of highly densified Orgone around the periphery of the material will melt, and the higher charge density stored in the matrix will discharge into the surrounding area with great energy. If you are able to see energy, then I can say that instead of glowing, it glows while its charging, then stops glowing, and appears dark. At this point, flicking it with your fingertips will cause it to emit bright sparks and long streamers, almost like a lightning bolt. Of course, I am talking about the Orgone and not electrical lightning discharges.

The charge density will remain high from this point, and the device will not 'freeze up' if it is subjected to even a small flow of Orgone by using cascading densities (attaching a small piece of a lower density Orgonite to the EXD. Since Orgone flows from a smaller potential to a greater potential, this will induce the energy to flow from the lower density to the higher density, stimulating the EXD as it does so. More on that in a future article.

In EXD, the density is so high that the Radionic data encoded into the material becomes very important. The smaller the metal particles, the more sensitive to Radionic encoding the Orgone matrix material becomes. Once the material achieves enough charge density to become active, it develops two distinct modes of operation. One mode in which the material is mostly dormant (without stimulation) and another active mode. In active mode, while the EXD matrix is being stimulated, the rate of flow radically increases. It flows many times faster than even lower grades like HD or MHD, while it is discharging its Orgone 'lighting'. This is a phenomenon I theorize is similar to the cooper pairing responsible for superconductivity in electronics theory. It appears that as you go up the spectrum of density in Orgone matrix material, you continue to exchange flow rate for charge density. The higher the density, the more 'torque' the generator has, and the lower the 'rpms' of the generator are. And so it goes progressively until you get into microscopic particle sizes.

When Orgone matrix material is made exclusively or even predominantly from microscopic particle sizes, two clear effects begin to emerge. The first effect is that the material becomes extremely sensitive to Radionic encoding. In my opinion, this is not only because the increased charge density in the matrix exerts resonant amplification effects on the energy fields within the matrix (causing weaker signals to be amplified to the point where they are imprinted on the resin), but also because the random arrangement of millions of tiny particles serves as a wealth of storage space for Radionic data. The multudinous particles are small enough to be easily acted on physically by subtle electromagnetic effects associated with Orgone fields and eddy currents within the electrical capacitance of the matrix material, and they reflect Radionic data in their physical orientation as parts of the Orgonite matrix.

The second effect is that when the charge density reaches a certain critical threshold, and if the size of the metal particles is small enough, the rate of Orgone flow through the matrix radically increases since when it discharges it does so more energetically than lower densities. At some point the matrix becomes 'Orgone-superconductive'.

In this state, the rate of flow increases radically, and since the charge density of the matrix is so high the charge density remains high despite an increased rate of flow. You will notice that in the picture with this article, there are no small blue lines to show the flow of Orgone through the EXD matrix, though these lines appear in the pictures of the other densities. This is because the energy can only practicably flow through the EXD matrix by traveling as a surge of the white flashes, which are close enough together that they touch and impinge on one another.

When the EXD is stimulated and it releases its 'lighting bolts' of Orgone, the Orgone can travel through the matrix with a rate of flow equal or near to the speed of the lighting bolt coming out the other side. That's pretty fast ;)

So, it tends to put out a pulsed discharge, but the pulses can be made very short and close together, or long and far apart. When incorporated with cascading density concepts, EXD can be used to maintain a near-steady discharge. The pulses can also be focused through a lens to blur them together into a steady stream. More experimentation to go along this line, and for now that's enough to give you something to think about ;)

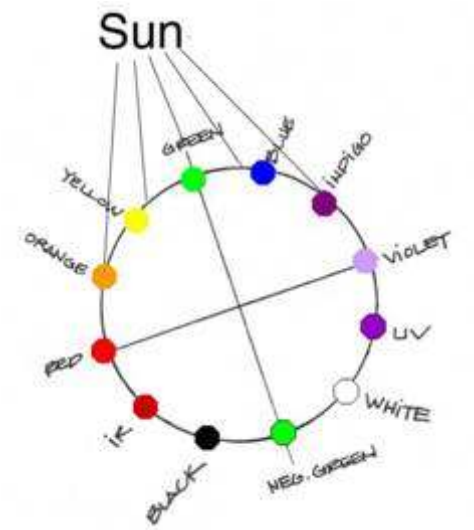
by Francois Capmeil

I started to make Orgonite some years ago, mostly copying other people's designs. The designs looked good and were fun to make, but the question of their effectiveness quickly came to the surface. It did not take me long to realize that few people really knew about the theory behind their design and how to test them. This nagged me for a while, so I looked around until I came across someone who mentioned measuring the field of an Orgonite device using "the Bovis scale". Researching the matter I found that this person used a pendulum.

I liked the idea and joined the American Society of Dowers. I attended their Annual conference which was coming then in Vermont USA. Over the years, one thing led to another and I got the chance to meet some remarkable people who have learned or inherited knowledge. They kindly shared their knowledge either through courses or personally. So I slowly learned a great deal about subtle energies, what they are, how to measure them and how to use them to make my environment safer, friendlier and more supportive.

Today, although I am still a student, I want to share some of what I have learned as a way of introducing others to this subject. I will also share contact details so you can follow up and learn more, if you are interested. There will be 3 installments, this one about the theory, the next one about measuring and the last one about simple and effective applications everyone can apply.



The story of Orgone is fairly well documented, and Wilhelm Reich's books are easily obtainable, so I will not talk about that, but rather about a discovery (or really a re-discovery) make by 2 French scientists in the 1930's Andre Chaumery and Leon De Belizal. Their field of expertise was micro-vibrational physics. They found that both the circle and the sphere manifest a spectrum of 12 energies qualities. These energies qualities are in resonance with the colors of the spectrum and so they named them after the colors. In doing so they ran short of one name, so they called the energy quality opposite green "Negative Green", not because it was negative in nature but because it appeared on the opposite side of the sphere from "Green". This is important to remember, there is nothing negative about "Negative Green", but the name.

The term "Energy quality" is a bit unusual, so I will explain with a metaphor: imagine man riding a horse. The horse galloping is the energy, it moves and has inertia, so cannot easily be stopped. The rider on the back of the horse can be the sheriff(good) or the robber (bad). The robber can be convinced to become good while the horse carrying him is still galloping, so the outcome can be completely altered without stopping the horse. The horse is the energy, it has a frequency (speed) and it carries a certain quality. This quality can completely change the impact and effect of the energy itself.

Chaumery and De Belisal's work was dramatically hampered by the fact that these energy qualities moved around the sphere in synch with the sun. They eventually found that cutting the sphere in half has the effect of fixing these energy qualities so they could be studied. Of the 12 energy qualities Negative green is the most powerful and the most penetrating. So much so that Chaumery eventually died of exposure, in a similar way that Marie Currie died from exposure to radioactivity.

Each of the 12 energy qualities is made of 2 waves, one vertical and one horizontal. To use a metaphor again: if you throw a stone in a pond, you will get circular ripples moving away from the centre, this is the horizontal wave, you also get the vertical movement of the water which makes the actual wave, this is the vertical wave. Just stay with me, please, this understanding is important as it relates to us directly.

Negative green being so powerful became a fascination for the French team. They built simple but powerful emitters to study it. They found that the Horizontal wave of Negative green is very beneficial, it acts as a sort of channel or gateway for beneficial energy from higher realms to reach us, this energy balances the cells, re-establishes health, create a nurturing environment for humans. It is by contrast detrimental to other creatures like ants and termites for example. This energy quality was consciously used in the design and construction of churches, mosques, temples and synagogues in the past, to create a link between the congregation and the divine.
The Vertical wave of Negative green is very detrimental to us, it destroys health by unbalancing the cells, it acts as a powerful dehydrating force, and is the force that killed Chaumery by mummification. But, it is very beneficial to ants and termites.

You may wonder where we are going here, so here is the point: most of the 20th century inventions like computers, mobile phones, microwave ovens, antennas ..etc emit large amounts of Negative green vertical. There is no running away from it. As a result, we now carry our little bottles of water, our trees (at least where I live in Australia) are attacked by ants and termites with devastating effects, we are grumpy, tired and our minds are often fogged and confused.

After Chaumery's death, an antidote was found for the Vertical Negative green. This antidote is the combination of 3 of the other energy qualities:

- Indigo, which is actually the higher harmonic of Gold
- Ultraviolet, which is the higher harmonic of the color of the same name and is also referred to as "the atmosphere of the Angels"
- Horizontal Negative Green

The combination of these 3 energy qualities is called BG3. The BG3 will transmute the detrimental into beneficial. If you remember the metaphor of the horse earlier, the presence of the BG3 will turn the robber into the sheriff, very simply without changing the energy itself.

How can this transmutation be accomplished? If you look at the color diagram above, you will see that each color location corresponds to an angle and defines a shape from the center of the circle. Using shapes and angles which will resonate with the BG3 (and we will see later how) transmutation become possible. Like angles and shapes, some sounds and numbers also resonate with the BG3.

What is the relation with Orgone? In my experience Orgone is most often present when the BG3 is present and devices generating Orgone also most often express the BG3. I do not know if they are the same but it is clear that they are associated in some way.

In the next article I will explain how to measure these energy qualities. In the mean time, to learn more you can visit these websites:

REAL DEAL RADIONICS

TOC Mobius Coils and Radionics

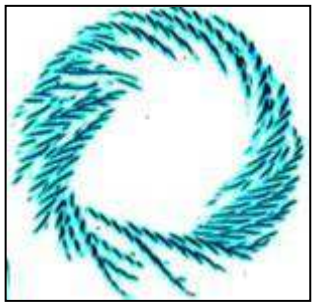
by Jon Logan



Mobius Coils are generally thought to be named after mobius strips, an object that has only one side and one edge. Perhaps the coils are named after the Mobius Transformation in mathematics. Both the shape and the mathematical transformation were named after August Ferdinand Möbius (1790–1868), a German mathematician and theoretical astronomer. Mobius was a professor at the University of Leipzig. You can make a mobius strip from a strip of paper, by giving one end a flip (half rotation) and then joining the ends together.

People have reportedly been using Mobius Coils in electronics research since as early as the 1930's. Some early versions of this coil were made from single strands of wire wound in an eccentric pattern on a toroidal path. These coils produced electrical and magnetic anomalies under some circumstances.

The Mobius Strip is a shape that folds back on itself. It would ordinarily have 2 sides and 4 edges, if it were a normal strip of paper. But when folded back on itself correctly, the sides and edges join together in such a way that they cancel each other out, and the resulting shape demonstrably has only one side and one edge. Early mobius coils and some modern versions mimic this shape in their winding pattern. The coil is wound from insulated wire in such a way that the finished coil forms a shape reminiscent of a mobius strip. This shape is essentially a closed loop with a half twist in the loop somewhere along the circumference.

There are several modern winding patterns currently being used which are referred to as Mobius Coils, and of course there are similarities and differences between them. The most important similarity as applied to Radionics is that they act as scalar antennae and therefore can be used to broadcast, receive, or amplify scalar wave patterns and effects.

It has been known for decades that scalar energy is intrinsic to Radionics, and affords a scientific comprehensibility to many of the 'anomalous' functions of Radionic devices, including their well documented ability to produce effects irrespective of distance. Scalar energy interfaces between 3D and 4D It transcends space-time as the established laws of physics conceive of space-time.

In alternative energy research, scalar energy is explored because of its capacity to draw energy from Aether and convert it into lower forms of energy such as heat, light, and electromagnetism, thus producing the appearance of 'free' energy.

More recently in Radionics, scalar energy is intelligently utilized because of its capacity to affect and direct lower forms of energy such as bioenergy and electromagnetism.

Many contemporary Mobius Coil designs are made from a series multi-filar cable with a helical twist. Most are made from copper wire, but any conductive metal will work. The wire has to be insulated.

In the early version of the Mobius Coil, made from single strands of wire, the winding pattern produced a spot where the wires would fold back over themselves, their magnetic fields intersecting at a tangent. It was this spot on the coil, the spot where the wires crossed over each other and formed a 'knot' or 'node' (analogous to the twist in a mobius strip) that produced the scalar effects associated with the coil.

In Simple terms, scalar waves are formed when two magnetic fields collide head-on or intersect at 90 degrees in such a way as to cancel each other out. One simple method of generating scalar pulses is a 'zip strip', a length of 2 conductor wire with the wires connected at one end. They form a loop antenna. If a pulsed electrical current is put through this antenna, it will generate small scalar effects from the magnetic field cancellation. At the center of the length of 2 conductor speaker wire is where the fields cancel each other out, and where the scalar effects are manifest.

Modern mobius coils with helical cable generate scalar waves more efficiently because the loop described above is twisted into a tightly spiraled cable. If the degree of the twist in the cable is close to 45 degrees, then the whole length of the loop antenna is folded back over itself at about 90 degrees. When a pulsed current is put through this cable, it will create a magnetic field around the wires forming the winding. Then the magnetic fields around the wires will intersect at 90 degrees and cancel out. This generates scalar effects along the whole length of the windings instead of only a small 'hot spot' on the coil. It also modulates the scalar emissions produced with the signal used to drive the coil.

You can form a Mobius Cable by taking a few tens of feet of insulated wire, folding it in half lengthwise once or twice, and looping the end without the leads over a suitable projection. Twist the cable with an electric drill until the spiral angle is close to 45 degrees. You can now form any number of different 3-dimensional winding patterns for coils from this cable, and all will demonstrate some degree of scalar effects. This allows for much greater simplicity of construction than the early models made from single strands of wire. It also allows for much more powerful coils in terms of scalar output, since virtually all of the wire in the coil is put to work canceling magnetic fields to produce scalar emissions.

In the ''zip strip' scalar antenna, no matter how long the wire is, only a few minute fractions of an inch of the wire is actually put to work converting magnetic field into scalar emissions. In mobius coils made from single, non-twisted strands of wire, only the sections of wire crossing through the node are put to work generating scalar emissions.

But in a length of Mobius Cable, most of the wire in the cable is put to work generating scalar emissions. If this cable is then wound into a coil with a 'mobius' winding pattern, the resulting coil is many times more efficient as a scalar antenna than any of the others mentioned so far in this article.

A small device known as an SP ("Succor Punch", Don Croft circa 2000, public domain) is becoming more common in Radionic circles, and for good reason. While in many ways a very primitive Radionics device, it is impressively powerful as an energy transmitter. Essentially, the SP class of devices are a mobius coil variant of some kind with a quartz core. Most of the devices made to date have used natural quartz crystals as the core object for the mobius coil. Quartz naturally acts to convert scalar energy to Orgone or Bioenergy. When you mate a low power scalar generating coil to a quartz core, you get a rude but relatively strong Radionic broadcaster. SPs are impressively strong in proportion to the complexity of their construction.
Early Radionics devices produced bioenergy effects, and produced scalar effects, but often without understanding the significance of scalar energy in relation to Radionics as a whole. Many Radionic transmitting devices are wired in such a way as to produce scalar emissions, but not of the same intensity as a properly constructed mobius coil. They generate scalar effects, but often as a side effect rather than a consciously engineered feature of the device.

Many Radionic machines built to date have been essentially very good tuning circuits that also serve as their own antenna. Therefore, the broadcast strength of such machines is proportionate to the efficiency at which the tuning circuit will double as a broadcast antenna. If the circuit is constructed primarily to be a tuning circuit, then its antenna characteristics will likely have been an unintentional but crucial side effect. The addition of a broadcast antenna such as a scalar generating coil removes this limitation and markedly increases the applicable power of the Radionics device.

More recently, Radionics manufacturers have begun the incorporation of scalar technology into their devices, and it is no surprise that many of these newer machines outperform older designs. When the tuning circuit is connected to an actual output device, the broadcast can be made tens or even thousands of times stronger. Think in terms of the difference between a crystal radio with the little earplug and a normal desktop radio with amplified speakers.

If the scalar wave patterns are the audio information driving the speaker, then the bioenergy or Orgone energy is analogous to the volume. Scalar waves carry Radionic data, and bioenergy or Orgone energy applies the Radionic data and does the work that produces effects in 3D and 4D.

Previously, decent Radionic 'speakers' were more difficult to construct because they tended to rely on precise geometry, expensive materials or complex electronics to generate their bioenergy and scalar effects. Mobius coils offer a simple and powerful method of constructing scalar-driven Radionic 'speakers', especially when combined with Orgone matrix material. Orgone matrix material releases bioenergy when bombarded by scalar waves. So does quartz. In both cases, the Orgone released is encoded with the Radionic data carried by the signal driving the coil.

In the case of the SP, the Radionic coding effect is largely ignored, as there is no tuning circuit, just a signal generator putting out a square wave in the millivolt range, usually at around 15Hz or around 32KHz. Small Zapper circuits similar to those developed by Hulda Clark for blood electrification are generally used to drive the mobius coil of an SP. Since there is no witness well or tuner, the Radionic input for the SP is just by hand contact with the device, and it relies on mental discipline to produce consistent results. However, even the simple SP device is a marked improvement in terms of applicable power output over many traditional Radionics devices. And, to be honest, the succor punch has another advantage despite its limitations... it is generally perceived as a 'fun' kind of tool to play with, which is certainly not something you can always say about black box machines with some dials and a switch or two. The rapport between the quartz / mobius combo and the person holding it is relatively strong due to resonance between the device and the users personal energy fields, making it reasonably responsive with only a little practice. Certainly a step up from many of the traditional Orgone beamer or wand designs I have seen. A succor punch may not be a music box, but it is a boom box. It is an interesting first of it's kind device, and a usable proof of concept tool with regard to mobius coils in Radionics engineering.

More complex devices are now built using mobius coils which allow for audio input, and act to transcribe almost any audio signal into an Orgone-boosted Radionic broadcast with relative ease and efficiency. Others are incorporated into traditional or computer-assisted Radionics tuners. Future articles will explore this relationship between scalar energy, Orgone energy, and Radionics further. In the meantime, you can find instructions for winding several mobius coil variants by doing a google search with the keywords "mobius coil", or at

Gifting with Energy Patterns Foreword

By Jon Logan

While many of us have been using TBs and HHGs to restore healthy conditions to the Orgone energy fields of our areas, a friend of mine named Chris has been developing a method of gifting by means of a thought form instead of a physical object like a TB. Chris began encoding the natural mineral formations inside some local mountains with the energy signature that he developed, and getting impressive results. The size of such natural quartz clusters makes them immensely powerful, though they are deeply buried and therefore not accessible in any practical physical manner short of mining. But they are within the reach of any competent Dowser, Radionics practitioner, Shaman or other energy worker. When Chris began working with them, I was able to observe the results since he lives near my area. The results were similar to what I have come to expect from a Chembuster. Since then, he has generated a fair amount of interest with this technique over the web, and you can read more about it at the yahoo group 'Cloudbusters'
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Cloudbusters/

Basically, he has developed a method of replicating thought forms which are extremely durable and appear to produce many of the same effects as Orgone devices like Chembusters and TBs. He distributes his thought form for this purpose and you can then use it to encode the mineral formations in your area. Aside from the fact of Chris being willing to energize crystals of your choosing with this energy signature by remote, I think that this is a promising idea, and one that is worthy of a mention. For more information, check out the URL above. Below is a short description in Chris's words. You can get in touch with Chris at chris@diviningmind.com . -Editor

TOC Gifting with energy patterns

by Chris Gozdzik

It all started as an experiment with axion spin generator and transferring energy between crystals. The rest is history :o) ... I found out I could remotely charge other crystals, rocks, water or objects and those charged objects could be used to further charge yet other objects without loosing it's power.

The main vibration can be "modulated" with other complementary vibrations. I did a phone session with Raymon Grace and we've added the vibration of prime water to it. I've also used vibration from Agnihotra ash, certain minerals, etc. One thing I need to stress - it CANNOT be used to harm. It has a hard-wired program to convert harmful vibrations to positive and it can't be changed, so any attempts to use it like that will back-fire.

The vibration is very high - in hundreds of millions on a Bovis scale. Basically what I do is connect to what I call the crystalline grid of Earth. I guess it's the positive energy around the Earth or even the Earth's aura that is dormant till we tap into it. It seems to convert negative (harmful) energy into positive. At first I thought it was only distributed through crystalline structures, but now I think that anything can be "charged" with it. There are a bunch of people that are using crystals charged this way. One person is using charged crystals in his bath to charge the water and claims a 4% decrease in crime rate in his area. A fellow in New Zealand uses them to charge water in his hydrotherapy clinic, it could be used for healing, etc.

To charge other crystals, rocks or water, etc. all you need to do is point the charged crystal / object towards the one you want to charge and mentally ask for the energy transfer.

To do it remotely - you can use a picture, even mental, to concentrate on and ask for the energy transfer. The transfer itself can be observed using dowsing – a pendulum over a 0-100% chart and it usually takes less then a minute for small objects.

To have your crystal charged remotely - choose a crystal or rock (clear quartz works the best), clear it by either rinsing it under running cold water or mentally asking to remove all the acquired vibrations. Mark it so you know which one it is.
I can charge it remotely for you or send you a small charged crystal for a small fee.

TOC High-Energy Clear-Casting

by Loohan

About February sometime, Clyde (another Orgonite developer) showed me some devices he had cast. Despite having a lot of clear resin with nothing in it, these were impressive. One had no metal at all, just a crystal. It had a nice energy to it. He had accomplished this by beaming a frequency at the molds while curing.

Apparently, clear, unadulterated resin will take and hold a much stronger charge than quartz or Orgonite. However, the addition of Orgonite provides greater power due to synergy. Orgonite takes in negative energy and processes it into positive. The clear stuff presumably does not work the same way, but is more like an intense gem, radiating the energy it is imbued with.

To me, this sort of clear + Orgonite device feels much more powerful than any Orgonite. Alternating layers seems to be a very powerful practice. I use a fine powder Orgonite mix for these, as I generally prefer to make the Orgonite layers thin, and don't want to mess with shavings, though they can be used ornamentally. I started a forum thread on this, which turned out pretty interesting. The forum is now defunct, but I saved the thread as a text file, which I will email out on request.

Apparently people did something similar decades ago with acrylic plastic, but it would lose potency over time. Since Orgonite will preserve the potency of second-generation Sally water (a variety of charged water) made with tap water, it follows that it probably would preserve it in resin, too.

But what if you cast resin just plain, with no metal at all in the unit? Will that lose potency? Well, whether it does or not, it's probably generally advantageous to put at least a thin layer of Orgonite on it, but I thought I'd try dowsing this. I recently realized I can "dowse" with my mouse cursor by typing out questions and answers, and mousing over the answers:

Will a 100% clear cast unit, no additives, lose amplitude or frequency over time?

YES NO

Will it retain 100% potency indefinitely? YES NO

I get no and (then) yes.

I have a plywood box I made, big enough to allow room for plenty of improvements over time. I have eclectic layering with state-of-the-art power graphics driving upward at the pyrex baking dish, and all kinds of goodies around the periphery of the dish, touching it. Also, a few inches below the layering is a shelf that supports several special yantras, etc. for right now.

Whatever you do, it has to be very powerful to make this technique worthwhile. I highly recommend you read OTB 15, because I think this will enable you to concentrate the freqs of your choice to as high an intensity as you like. I suggest pics of such things as gold, monoatomic gold, precious stones, labyrinths, etc.

I have water in the dish, and set the molds in that. Then I pour a layer of clear resin with absolutely nothing mixed in. When it sets up enough, I may drop a coil on the new surface, maybe a few metal shavings.

Then I pour the second layer, which is fine powder Orgonite with many wonderful ingredients. There is unlimited potential for improving the setup.

I still haven't put in the Earth-battery powered coil(s), the sound system, or a few other ideas I have. If you make different items with distinctly different freqs, and touch them together, you will have a remarkable synergy. I think this has applications for gifting because of its superior intensity and power.

No need to buy expensive ingredients. Find a pic on the web and process it. No need to use up the fine ingredients you have; just put them in a glass jar and touch them to the charging tray. I think soon I will cast a cylindrical "crystal" for my wand. Why not? It holds far more charge than quartz.

The disadvantage is that the setup is elaborate and space-consuming. And in my case, quite small in capacity. Anyway, I am going for it. I am offering units made this way. See my products page. I think I can offer more power for less money than most of the competition. Of course, they'll probably all follow suit soon.

DOWSING & RADIESTHESIA

TOC Dowsing - A Multipurpose Tool

by Ted Stretmoyer

Dowsing is a method of finding things or arriving at a straightforward "yes" or "no" answer by connecting to your Source. Dowsing has been around for millennia. Moses is said to have dowsed for water while the Children of Israel wandered about in the desert. One theory is that dowsing works by connecting with your magnetic field, or aura, and that of the Earth. More experience with this attunement allows for more accuracy.

Dowsing isn't difficult, but 98% of it is your own focus. In order to focus properly, you must detach from all of the concerns and stresses accumulated over the day and mentally shove them into a file cabinet to be dealt with later. This will help you to better connect with your Higher Self, the portion of yourself that is closest to Spirit, and obtain the answers you need. You may find prayer or meditation beneficial in aiding you to focus in bringing in this higher source of information. If your mind is filled with anxieties, then that's what you'll dowse and it won't be very accurate. Clear your mind and get yourself out of the way. Many people pray for guidance before starting to dowse; after all, dowsing is a spiritual science. Detachment from the answer is also a key to good dowsing.

I first began dowsing while giving a go at "living off the land" some eleven years ago in New Mexico on some family property. Years earlier, I watched as my stepfather took a forked willow tree branch and dowsed for water on the property for a new well. The branch made deep creases on his inner arms just below the elbows. At the time dowsing appeared to me to be something that perhaps you needed to be specially gifted to be able to do. When I returned to the property years after his death, I decided to give water dowsing a try myself so that I could locate the perfect spot for a new well. I took a branch from a tree that had recently been cut by another family member (without my approval). The branch was still very much alive. I decided to try a technique of my own by holding the branch in my two hands. As soon as I had taken a hold of the branch, I was very nearly forced along the property at a fast pace to a given direction and then the branch literally yanked my arms down at a specific spot. As my wife looked on she believed I would probably break my leg in a gopher hole as fast as I was going without looking. After marking the spot where the branch drew to the ground. I then walked several yards away, turned around and shut my eyes and was again drawn to the exact same spot. This was where we would find water for our new well.

You can also use dowsing rods to find specific precious metals (you give them the intent, for gold prospecting, etc.). The wife told me that in her early psychic development classes in the 70's they used to prove the effectiveness of dowsing by having someone hold an "L" shaped dowsing rod in each hand. Thereafter they would be asked a question. If they answered truthfully the rods would turn inward. If they answered falsely the rods would turn outward.

How to Use a Pendulum for Dowsing
Hold the handle of your pendulum comfortably in your writing hand with your first two fingers and thumb. The index finger is "negative," the second finger is "positive" and the thumb is "ground" and these three fingers together provide for good energy balance. Now focus, and ask your Higher Self to show you three things:

Your "YES" position.
Your "NO" position.
Your "TRACKING or NEUTRAL" position.

What you are doing is establishing a standard code to communicate with. Most people have one of two basic codes. One set of codes is a to-and-fro swing for YES, sideways for NO (like you shake your head yes or no), and going in a circle for the tracking position. The other basic set of codes is a clockwise circle for YES, a counterclockwise circle for NO, and swinging to and fro for the tracking position. Don't worry if nothing suggests itself, it just means you will have to choose your code-swings.

Once you establish your code, you will have to affirm this code before you start dowsing throughout your break-in period, which can be a month or longer depending on how much you practice. Experience will show you variations on the YES or NO answers, and how to phrase your questions to get the most direct and accurate answers. Remember to get yourself out of the way, focus and detach from the answer.

Your TRACKING POSITION, or NEUTRAL POSITION, is important. You may find it best to start with your pendulum already moving gently in this neutral position (or "holding pattern") so that the pendulum swing will snap more quickly into the YES or NO positions. After asking and obtaining an answer to a question, thank the Higher Self then clear the slate, so to speak, by gently getting the pendulum going in the tracking position again so your next answer is not influenced by the swing of your last answer.

The "leading edge" is the portion of the pendulum swing that is furthest away from the center, which will point you in the direction you want to go. Look for this leading edge, especially when you are trying to locate something you have misplaced. Accuracy comes with practice.

Some Practice Exercises:

• Dowse for an electrical outlet in a room. It does not matter that you already know where all of the outlets are, you just want your pendulum to show you, with the leading edge, where they are. Start with the closest one first, when you are standing in the middle of the room. Graduate to doing this exercise in buildings you are not familiar with.

• Do the coin toss. Establish which pendulum positions are "heads" or "tails". Toss a coin, slap it down and cover it so you don't see it, and dowse whether it is "heads" or "tails". Anything over 50% is good. This is great for developing your accuracy, and it can be done just about anywhere.

• Do the shell game. Take out three cups and have someone hide something underneath one and then shuffle the cups. You can dowse which cup conceals the object. Another great way of developing your accuracy.

• Try having your pendulum out and in motion at a party or other gathering to gauge the "sincerity" as you tune into one conversation, then another. You will find the pendulum agreeing or disagreeing with what is being said. Sort of like a "sincerity detector". You will find it amusing.

• Use your pendulum to help you select, for example, the best book on a given subject in a bookstore or library. Start by reading the back of the book's cover while you have your pendulum out and going in the tracking position, then ask "Is this for my best and highest good?" and observe which way the pendulum swings. A weak "yes" means you should ask whether there is a better book on the subject, or whether you already have a good book on this subject at home. This technique will save you a lot of time and money. Try applying this technique in other ways.

Potential Uses For Dowsing:

• Detecting foods that are correct or incorrect for you, especially if you have a food allergy.
• Locating lost items.
• Locating Geopathic or noxious rays, then selecting the best Radionic cures to correct the problem.

• Selecting the best thing (tool, book, plant, food, cosmetic, class, etc.) for your use.
• Locating a leak in a water pipe or source of electrical trouble.
• Determining whether someone is trustworthy.
• Keeping tabs on the location of your kids when they are away from home.
• Determining the types of plants to put in your yard and their proper placement.
• Locating oil, potable water, minerals, and so forth.
• Determining which professional to hire (doctor, lawyer, roofer, etc.).
• Locating the best place to live.
• Determining which melons, avocados or other produce are ripe or sweet.
• Getting yourself out of a state of being lost — finding the way home.
• Determining the appropriate person to hire or date.
...and a zillion other possible applications, limited only by your imagination!

TOC PlatinumChi-Star Clearing - A Method To Cleanse The Entire Body

By Steven Dainis - Edited by Philip N. Ledoux

For those who are new to the etheric body, I will try to introduce some background information. We have been educated to live by our senses - touch, smell, sight and hearing. Limiting our education results in the limiting of our abilities to develop our total potential. Actually, we are limiting ourselves to interacting with only half of our body and mind. There is another unseen portion to our bodies called the etheric body, some refer to it as the 4th dimensional existence. Science is just discovering that it is the auric body (this etheric body of each individual) that carries the memory of scars. One cannot remove scars from the physical body with permanence without first removing the scar memory from the aura.

A few gifted people (some say we all have it but learn to forget via parental scolding) are able to see the aura around a person, and depending on the coloration, tears, holes, etc. the observer can tell which organ in the body is having difficulties, how badly affected an organ is and the general health of the person. Just as our physical bodies get a vicious cold, catch the flu or have plugged sinuses, the etheric body, this aura and the associated chakras can be toxic, can be plugged and can be functioning badly. As we mentioned, the physical body can affect the auric body, likewise the auric body can affect the physical body; and that is what this free information on "PlatinumChi-Star Clearing" for cleansing the total body is all about.

Here is a "Do It Yourself" technique that any person can do all by themselves to cleanse the auric body. You, the user of this information, do not have to be able to see your aura, nor the associated chakras, nor the actual events you will create; although you do have to be able to visualize and feel within your mind the steps which follow. All of the steps have been carefully dowsed to ascertain their necessity; the complete dowse is included at the end of this essay if you wish to peruse the verification. So, let's get started with some very easy to understand and easy to apply steps to auric self-cleansing. Very similar to a child learning how to bathe themselves, it is more important to start and try than to observe and ponder.

In some location where you will not be interrupted:

1. Increase/alter your brain-wave frequency. (More on this below)

2. Visualize what it was like to use light in the past. (If no experience merely visualize using and handling light and what it feels like.) [Steven prefers to use PlatinumChi light]

3. Mentally visualize and feel what it was/is like to verbalize the word "CLEAR"

4. Combine all of this through visualization and mental feeling into a compact ball which is further compacted until it becomes a bright point and looks exactly like a bright star in the night sky.

5. Bring this compacted feeling-visualization-star-like-point into your crown chakra, or merely down through the top of your head into your body. [Steven prefers to bring it into his body through the solar-plexus] (more on the chakra system below)

6. Now allow this "star-point" to expand and literally-mentally-explode within your physical-etheric-body. Simultaneously think/feel the command "CLEAR!" as the PlatinumChi-Star explodes!

That is all there is to it. All done silently, personally and effectively. Is it all done within this physical body of ours? Well, the etheric body and the physical body are not two separate entities, they are intertwined, so the answer is both a yes and a no, the reality being a solid yes.

The Chakras:

The chakras are vortexes of energy that look somewhat like a funnel or a trumpet. In general they face "forward" similar to a person using a bugle. There is also an associated "rear" chakra extending out the back of the physical body (in the etheric realm) which is a cleansing device and much smaller than its associated frontal chakra. There is one "grounding" chakra that uptakes energy from the Earth, the small end pointing up into the torso and in general winds around the spine which all the other chakras connect to, and a major "crown" chakra that intakes energy from the universe. The other chakras from the bottom to the top of the torso: Sacral Plexus, Solar Plexus, Heart, Throat, Bridge (over the eyes) and Third Eye (center of forehead). These all combine into an interconnecting system. Because of our lack of knowledge our physical bodies become sluggish or blocked; likewise for the same reason our etheric body via the chakra and auric system becomes blocked. The clearing system described clears out the etheric body and as a result of the interactions with the physical body, the physical body is also cleared to a great extent. The explosion is just that, an explosion that spreads outward throughout the whole auric & etheric bodies, clearing all the chakras as a matter of course in the process.

Increasing Brain-Wave Frequency:
Most people reading this should have some sort of experience in altering their brainwave frequency through some sort of technique that takes some time to learn. Be it drumming, meditating, mantra usage, self-hypnosis, deep-rythmic-breathing, etc...The point is that you should use a technique that gets you very relaxed, yet very focused. Use this technique right at the beginning of the steps outlined above. Also, if you are at all familiar with making Orgonite, then have some around you before you begin this technique. Orgonite will boost your personal Chi-level, and Orgonite is very responsive to mental-commands. You can purchase Orgonite if you do not know how to make it.

AETHER AND BIOENERGY THEORY

TOC Geopathic Stress

by Aurum Solis

People are more aware than ever of their health. Unfortunately, there are some natural effects which can be extremely harmful to the immune system and over which we have no control, such as Geopathic stress (GS). If you think of the Earth as a giant electro-magnet, GS occurs when waves of radiation seep from the Earth's core and bisect other natural electromagnetic phenomena such as swift flowing underground streams, mineral concentrations or fault lines. The negative Earth rays become harmful as they rise up through buildings affecting the body's natural biorhythm and causing sick building syndrome. The impact on health can be dramatic ranging from insomnia and irritability to serious psychological and physical illness.

What Is Geopathic Stress?

Geopathic Stress is natural radiation that rises up through the Earth and is distorted by weak electro-magnetic fields created by subterranean running water, certain mineral concentrations, fault lines and underground cavities. The wavelengths of the natural radiation disturbed in this way become harmful to living organisms. Electro-pathological energy created by modern technology can also contribute to Geopathic stress in the form of high and low frequency energy from telecommunication towers, electricity pylons, transformers, radar and radio towers.

Hartmann Grids

Hartmann Grids were discovered in 1950 by a German medical doctor, Ernst Hartmann. The lines form a grid around the Earth, running north to south and east to west, and extend to a height of 60 - 600 feet. The north-south lines appear approximately every 6 feet 6 inches and the east-west lines appear approximately every 8 feet 2 inches. According to Dr. Hartmann, the worst place that a person can sleep or work is over a Hartmann knot, where two Hartmann lines cross, as harmful radiation is intensified at this juncture.

Geopathic Zones have a range of influence from 2 to 200 feet, and reach a height of 600 to 30,000 feet. Their direction is random and may be horizontal, vertical or diagonal. When natural radiation rises through the Earth, its wavelength becomes distorted. These distorted fields of radiation are harmful to living organisms, and produce the Geopathic zones. It is not uncommon to find them parallel to, or imposed upon the 'Hartmann Grids'. Geopathic zones can also be man-made. These would include electromagnetic fields that emanate from such structures as high tension, or satellite towers, electrical street poles, or fuse boxes.

Evidence Connecting Geopathic Stress to Illness

Geopathic stress has been found to be the common factor in many serious and minor illnesses and psychological conditions, especially those conditions in which the immune system is severely compromised. The major issue is an increased risk of cancer. While Geopathic stress does not directly cause cancer, it weakens the body and makes it much more likely to acquire cancer. Studies have shown that over 85% of patients who die from cancer had regular exposure to Geopathic stress.

The late Dr. Hans Nieper, M.D., stated that 92% of all his cancer patients and 75% of his MS patients are Geopathically stressed. Dr. Nieper was a world-renowned cancer and MS specialist and operated one of the largest MS practices in the world, located in Germany. Von Pohl proved to the Central Committee for Cancer Research in Berlin, almost 60 years ago, that one was unlikely to get cancer unless one spent some time in Geopathically stressed places (mainly when sleeping). Dr. Hager, M.D., found Geopathic Stress was present in all 5,348 cancer cases investigated. The German physicist Robert Endros studied this question with Professor KE Lotz of the School of Architecture of Biberach (West Germany). Their analysis of 400 deaths due to cancer revealed that 383 cases were related to dwelling over geological faults, underground water veins and disturbances of the natural geomagnetic field.

Other potential problems of Geopathic stress include cardiovascular deficiency, attention deficit disorder, immune deficiency disorders, and chronic fatigue. Some lesser effects of influence are chronic body pains, headaches, sudden signs of physical aging, irritability, and restless sleep. It is also a common factor in cases of infertility and miscarriages, learning difficulties, behavioral problems and neurological disabilities in children. When the home or work place of the affected person is neutralized, the Geopathic stress conditions resolve themselves and the body begins to heal.

Geopathic Stress And Sleep
Sleeping in a Geopathic stress fault is particularly stressful. During sleep your brain is supposed to rest half the time and is busy healing your body the other half. However, if you are exposed to Geopathic stress during sleep your brain never receives the full rest it requires to repair and regenerate due to the Geopathic stress. To have optimal health it is important to make certain you are not sleeping on one of the Geopathic stress faults, which will be discussed later.

Physical Indicators of Geopathic Stress
There are physical indications of Geopathic stress such as cats, as they actually seek out sleeping over Geopathic stress areas, owls, snakes, high infestations of slugs and snails, insects, parasites, bacteria, viruses, ant and termite nests, wasp nests and bees all like Geopathic stress lines. Most mammals avoid Geopathic stress. Horses and cows stabled over Geopathic stress may become sick or injury prone.

Geopathic stress can cause lightning to strike trees, produce dead or stunted gaps in hedges and avenues of trees, non-productive fruit trees, tree cankers and twisted growth in trees. Fruit trees are the most sensitive; oaks (like to grow near underground water hence their attractiveness to lightning strike), redwoods, and ash are most resilient; and elders are attracted to Geopathic stress. Bare patches in lawns, moss and fungi, stunted or mutated growth in veggie gardens particularly lie (or fall) on edge lines of Geopathic stress. Ivy, bindweed, nettles, dock thistles, foxgloves, ferns and nightshades are attracted to and thrive in Geopathic stress.

Animals and very young children have not lost their instinct to feel if a place is healthy or not. In the morning one can often see children cramped into one side of their beds, oriented differently from when they were tucked in. It is wise to determine then if the bed is well positioned. Animals in pastures will avoid a Geopathic zone to the extent that one could follow their paths by looking at the area that has been grazed. Through out history, animals have constituted the economical base of rural properties and the greatest care has been taken to build healthy shelters for them. We see very few old farm buildings built on a Geopathic fault.

The conjunction of high power lines, underground water streams and H grid crossing should be considered as extreme perturbation of the ambient field. It should be essential to have a correct positioning of beds in places where people have a diminished resistance and health, such as hospitals. According to the Institute of Geobiology of Lausanne (Switzerland) 30% of the patients studied showed signs of improvement after having their beds shifted from active zones.

According to B. Merz (Institute of Geobiology of Chardonne, Lausanne in Switzerland) just as a place can make us prone to disease or depression, another can lift us to more subtle levels of vibration, strengthening our body and spirit. Such places were sought-after throughout history and held as sacred. Some are natural wonders like Ayers Rock (the Aborigines have long known this), the Grand Canyon, the Matterhorn and countless other places on this planet which inspire the millions of modern pilgrims we call tourists. Other strong areas of Geopathic stresses are man-made poles of attraction built on powerful sites by architects or priests obeying a sacred tradition, like the pyramids of Egypt, the statues of Easter Island or many Gothic cathedrals.

Detection of Geopathic Stress
Investigators have tried many different instruments, such as geomagnetometers (some very expensive), but none have proved as consistently reliable, accurate or as quick as a human dowser. Most scientists measuring Geopathic stress with instruments will take a dowser along to locate the radiation initially. After years of research and many field trials, Life Technology has developed strategies and measures to combat, neutralize and clear

Geopathic Stresses from homes, offices and other buildings. Once the procedure has been performed, people have felt significant positive changes in their environment; however, it may take months before the total effects are achieved. The method used by the company Life Technology involves placing metal rods in the centre of any Geopathic lines in the vicinity of one's home. This method has been demonstrated to be an effective and permanent remedy to a variety of Geopathic stress related problems. Copyright ©2005 Aurum Solis

TOC Meditation on a Moqui Stone

by ZSL

Several years ago Jon Logan shared some of his moqui stones with me. They were a mystery. How they formed had been theorized by many. Pyroclastics exploded out of volcanoes? Tektite meteorites? Special stones formed inside geysers? Jon's supply was limited but we used them in Orgonite and the last ones I had went into the Octos we gifted into the finger lakes of southern British Columbia in May 2003.

Going down to Sedona for David and Erin's wedding March 26 2005, Joan and I passed by a Moqui Cave near Orderville Utah. Are moqui stones found in caves? Jon says they are found lying on the ground. Maybe moqui is a multiple use word?

The day after the wedding David showed me some moquis he had purchased at the crystal swap meet at Quartzite Arizona a week earlier. I picked up a beet shaped moqui about two inches in diameter and the images of the stone flying immediately popped into my head. Then I saw it exploding out of a volcano and through a luminous cloud which sometimes appears above the crater of volcanoes. On this particular moqui there were slender silvery crystals radiating from the points top and bottom. David explained that the moquis are found in teacup sized holes in desert areas. Sometimes the holes are in the exposed bedrock. Most often they are found in certain areas and nowhere else. One of the theories is that stones caught in holes in the ground are spun and eroded like river rocks inside the pockets. In the desert, where is the water? How is the rotational water erosion set up in a divot hole on a desert plain? Why does it not happen in wetter areas? How are the exterior shells of moquis heat glazed in water?

David had one broken moqui. The interior was like a piece of coarse sandstone partially fused into rose quartzite. The individual crystals were consistently the same size throughout. The crystals were between one and two millimeters and tightly packed together. The transition zone from the interior rose quartz to the dark basalt-like exterior shell is less than three millimeters. The shell is three or four millimeters thick. It is as if a piece of pink nougat had been dipped in hot chocolate and spun as it cooled.

Holding the moqui in Sedona I could see a luminescent stone flying for hours and then crashing. It was flying like a miniature UFO inside an inertia less null gravity. It was still hot from the volcano and getting hotter from the luminescence it picked up from the glowing cloud that it flew through. As soon as the chuck of lava flew through the cloud it continued in a straight line high in the atmosphere even into space. There are paintings of Stromboli and Vesuvius erupting which show pieces of hot rock flying straight into the air without the least bit of fall.

I have talked about Aetheric Coronal Elements (ACE) with Jon and others. It is a special type of Orgone which is self-luminous. Blue Orgone might be one of the magnetic elements of the fourth dimension. ACE is what provides Earth with light and heat. The corona of the sun is over a million degrees F. The surface of the sun is about 8000 degrees F. There are a few Laws of Thermodynamics violated by the sun. ACE is the most obvious offender. ACE is getting energy from somewhere and converting that high source of energy into heat and light. I do not believe that ACE is a Zero-Point energy source, it is more likely using a pre-existing power in the Aetheric realms and translating it into the third dimension. By definition zero-point would be generating power from the underlying fabric of time and space. As there are a lot of stars there is probably a lot of ACE and a lot of Aetheric power being converted into starlight. ACE is also used in the propulsion of UFOs. If a hunk of lava can be converted into a mini UFO in the blink of an eye then UFO propulsion is not rocket science...it is simpler than launching a shuttle.

Bearing in mind that the mist from Niagara Falls is levitating and hail stones inside thunderstorms are levitated until they grow to baseball size, then the same electro-gravitic conditions can be established around pieces of hot lava. Frogs and fish have been levitated and have fallen out of a clear blue sky.

Holding David's moqui stone I could see it spinning. In the molten state the centrifugal pressure would separate the lighter elements from the heavier metals. The silicates would remain in the center and the iron, magnesium, calcium etc would go to the surface. The silicates would remain molten. The metals would be the first to cool when the ACE is lost. Most likely the ACE would be lost to water or to the soil.

In the same way UFOs show erratic movements, moquis in flight would be equally erratic and deflected by the magnetic field of the Earth. In that moquis are found in groupings in the desert, they are the stones which did not have their ACE stripped off them by rain or bodies of water and lost their Aetheric corona when they hit the soil. The impact would be of such energy and the spinning electro-gravitic field of such intensity that hemispherical holes were carved in the ground.

With the loss of the ACE the exterior would cool quickly into a high metal content basalt-like glaze. The interior would cool slower, forming sand grain sized crystals. The lost ACE would be attracted by water underground and eventually migrate to great depth where it would accumulate and form pockets of magma in the crust. ACE helps create volcanoes. ACE also helps metamorphosize rocks. ACE partially smelts metallic ore bodies and separates and concentrates metals. ACE creates geodes. ACE cooked the Paloose and roasted a lot of goose as there would have been a large extinction when that Coronal Mass Ejection hit the west coast tens of thousands of years ago.

It is possible that Niburu had a corona but lost it about three thousand years ago. As soon as I held David's moqui stone I knew that it had flown. The exterior had been shaped by heat, spin, wind, magnetism and a lack of gravity. Some other moqui stones are shaped like walnuts, others like filberts, and others like clam shells. They looked like they were once living and are now frozen in stone. There is a lot of life yet in the two filbert shape moquis David gave me.

EXD Orgone Matrix Material Recipe

Ingredient	Amount
Metallic Copper Aerosol Paint	35 mL liquid
Polyester Resin	250 mL
Powdered Iron Rust or Red Earth - Fine -	40 mL
ARUM SOLIS or other monatomic gold-rhodium-iridium mixture (optional but worth it)	2-5 mL
Catalyst	+400%
(Polyester resin = 'Fiber Glass' resin)

Process

Attach a short length of plastic tubing over the nozzle of the aerosol pant can with aluminum tape or duct tape as shown. You can carefully remove the nozzle from one can and transfer it to another so you only need to make one nozzle like this. Put the end of the plastic tubing in a small disposable cup and spray out the amounts of liquid paint that you need. The paint will get cold in the cup, and it will slow the curing of the mixture. If using polyester resin, it will slow the curing of the mixture both by cooling it and chemically on the part of the copper.

Measure out the liquid paint and mix it in the disposable cup with the dry ingredients.

In a separate container, mix half the catalyst into the resin. Then add the paint mixture slowly, stirring continually. It will take a fair amount of stirring to get the paint mixed in thoroughly. Once the paint mixture is added to the resin, mix in the rest of the catalyst, You should get a thin liquid that pours easily into the molds and is only a little thicker than the resin you used to make it.

Do a small test batch to determine if the catalyst ratio given here is correct for your resin and use more or less as required if necessary. If you get cracks and the mixture curls up a lot, then use less catalyst. If it takes more than 48 hours to solidify, use more catalyst. - Donated by Wizzers Workshop

THE POLITICS OF FREE WILL

TOC The Right to Decide

by Jon Logan

This is a time of change, and of upheaval. In the 'free' world, our perceptions are changing at a planetary level. This causes us to see that many of our freedoms are threatened in this time. It also causes us (if we are wise) to see that many of those things which we had considered freedoms historically were in fact control mechanisms, instilled deeply within our subconscious, in some cases by our own foolishness and in others by intentional machination.

And as we begin to see through veils of illusion, we glimpse a truth, and that truth is that we can decide how we wish to interpret the facts in evidence before us. This is relevant because our interpretation of the 'facts' (which are in fact constructs of illusion in a holographic consciousness interface which we call physical reality) influences the behavior of the world around us, respecting those facts.

We can, for example, refuse to see those things in the world which cause us suffering, and thereby prevent them from entering out personal reality by simply not giving them any energy. In theory, anyway. This technique works, but it has fundamental limitations. It works to prevent us from manifesting our own fears, but it does nothing to prevent the intentional invasion of our personal sanctity by other free will agents in the world around us. Those who believe that this fundamentally yin based technique is the only viable one tend to be contented but brittle, and they are easily herded. Since they flee from evil, evil uses its presence to control them. They are those whom have come this far by virtue of their command of the feminine dualistic energy. They tend to be very accomplished healers, though often rather fragile.

We can alternately focus on those things in the world which we perceive to hold us back or cause us suffering, in the attempt to by awareness proactively overcome them in some fashion. Like the previous, this technique works, but it too has fundamental flaws. It gives rise to both valiant heroes and horrible dictators. This is the right hand or yang path. It works well to stimulate our progress, but does little to give us a balanced perspective of the direction our progress ought to take. Those who feel that this yang technique is the only workable one tend to start out well, but soon become bitter, and then begin by their focused attention to mold themselves into that which they combat. Their intentions are in most cases sincere, but often their hands are misguided by an exaggerated desire for revenge. They tend to be accomplished warriors, and champions of the oppressed, though often they themselves become the oppressor later in life.

Both of these techniques work, to a point. In fact, both of them are needed in order for a person to be in a position to make a 'choice' at all.

If we at every intersection turn left, then this is not a choice. Rather, it is a habit. The same is true if we at every corner turn right instead. In order to get where we want to go, we need both hands on the wheel. We need to be reasonably proficient in both of these techniques. In short, we need to be able to turn the other cheek, in the interest of maintaining our own sanity. We also need to be able to enforce a measure of our will on the world around us, in the interest of staying alive long enough to get any benefit from the life we are living. We need to be able to use these two diametrically opposed points of view to offset each other. And if we begin to do that, we see that the things worth making decisions on are generally of a higher level than is the decision to turn left or right; higher than the preference for one technique over another; in short, higher than our habits.

These are those in this world who would remove from us the 'burden' of free will and thinking for ourselves, in the interest of subjugating us. The attempt is made to rationalize this by declaring it to be in our best interests. What is really in our best interests is to make our own choices, and learn from them. We cannot evolve or grow or make personal progress in any real way without the freedom to choose our own direction as individuals.

So, while we are exercising our right to choose; to decide what we will think and do and believe, we do well to bear in mind that sometimes we should choose one thing, sometimes another. No solution works for every single problem we encounter in life. If we are persons whom seldom if ever 'fight back', then it is high time that we choose to do just that every now and then. And if we are persons whom seldom if ever back down, then it is time for us to do so upon occasion, and learn to do so with a measure of grace.

Until we can look back in our own life and find at least one instance where we made the correct choice in going left; and another instance where we made the correct choice in going right, we have no real bearing on the future. We just think we do. Of course, that doesn't stop us from deciding:)

TOC The Restless Mind

by Bhagwath Reddy

Ancient Seers of India gave the term 'Chita' to the Restless Waves of the Mind. Thus, Rishi Pathanjali defined yoga as Chitta vritthi Nirodhaha.

Meditation, in the beginning, is making all the restless waves of the mind become restful. Soon, a deep restful state of mind is attained as all the restless waves of the mind totally cease! Meditation is total cessation of all the restless waves of the mind. Meditation is total calming of all the restless waves of the mind. Man is basically troubled by the restless nature of the mind. The restless waves of the mind result in unwanted dissipation of the energy of the soul. When the soul energy is thus dissipated the physical body becomes weak and more susceptible to attacks from various external sources, resulting in various diseases, early aging and finally early death.

Ability to concentrate on the issue at hand is deeply hampered by the restless waves of the mind. The power of memory becomes impaired. The more restless waves of the mind, the more ineffectiveness of the person to attend to any work, and it has to be remembered that mind is naturally restless.

The naturally restless mind is the common lot of all persons who do not cultivate the mind. An uncultivated land of course, becomes full of weeds. Similarly, an uncultivated mind becomes full of unwanted thoughts. Here we did lot of study and conclude that HHGs will enhance the meditation process and take us to deeper state of consciousness in much less time. The clarity and continuity of images in meditation is exceptionally good when you use HHGs. I also feel they act as much more than meditation boosters.

NEW PARADIGM CONSCIOUSNESS

TOC YUGA

by Bhagwath Reddy

In Hinduism the life cycle of the world is divided into 4 Yugas. (ages)

SATYA YUGA - (sometimes also called krta-Yuga): the golden age - lasts 1,728,000 years. During this Yuga the majority of the population is situated in the mode of goodness and the average life span at the beginning of the Yuga is 100,000 years. When consciousness is in a high state, at this time, 90% of the inhabitants of the Earth are enlightened. This is called Satya Yuga, or the Age of Truth TRETA YUGA - also called the silver age - lasts 1,296,000 years and the process of self realization is the performance of opulent yajnas (sacrifices). The average life span is 10,000 years and the godly qualities decrease one fourth as compared to the Satya Yuga.

DVAPARA YUGA - or the bronze age - lasts 864,000 years and the process of self realization is the worship of the deities within temples. Godly qualities are reduced to 50% by now and the average life expectancy is only 1000 years.

KALI YUGA - the iron age of hypocrisy and quarrel - lasts 432,000 years. The process of self realization is sankirtana, the chanting of the Holy Names of the Lord. God consciousness is reduced to 25% of the population and life expectancy is only 100 years. The year 2005 is 5,097 years from the beginning of Kali Yuga. It is predicted that by the end of the Yuga people will hardly be older than 20 years and their only food will be meat.

Total Time for One Cycle or Manvantara: 4,320,000,000 years. This is called A Day of Brahma (The god of creation) and is followed by a night of equal length.
One complete day and night of Brahma: 8,640,000,000 years. 360 of these days is called One Year of Brahma:3,110,400,000,000 years. 100 of these years constitute the life of Brahma called a Maha Kalpa: 311,040,000,000,000 years.

At the end of a Maha Kalpa or cycle of creation, Shiva (the god of destruction) manifests his destructive influence and the universe is dissolved. [Actually the entire universe becomes spiritualized] The ancient texts call this the cosmic dissolution. All the levels of the manifest universe disappear. After a great cosmic rest cycle, another creative cycle begins as a new Brahma emerges out of the navel of Narayana and the universe is created. This means the destruction of galaxies and creation of new galaxies takes place after this cycle.

Another item of importance is that one who has achieved the highest level of conscious realization is said to realize and become one with Brahman. At this point, all individuality as we know it disappears. The individual Jiva, Soul or Atman returns to its source from which it will not return of its own volition. However, for reasons known only to itself, certain souls may return for reasons understood only by Narayana.

SATYA /KRTA-Yuga: When consciousness is in a high state, at this time, 90% of the inhabitants of the Earth are enlightened. This falls to 10% in TRETA and DVAPARA Yuga. In KALI Yuga it becomes far less than 1% of the people on Earth are enlightened. However, it is said that it is easier to make progress in consciousness in Kali Yuga. It is said that resistance itself provides a route to rapid progress. So in Kali Yuga our efforts to achieve spiritual growth produce much faster results than they would in any other age of consciousness because of the great and general resistance to things spiritual.

There is no disagreement among all the sages, pundits, gurus and swamis that Kali Yuga, the present is an opportunity for more rapid spiritual progress than any other age.

So the concept of Yuga is very true as we know today that new galaxies are born continuously and old galaxies are dying. It is also true that because of the present mechanical life the number of people trying to achieve the knowledge of consciousness is less in percentage in Kali Yuga, but who ever has a will can achieve the knowledge much faster due to the easy spread of information.

Although the mental pressures in our day to day lives are increasing, it is our duty to take this concentrated pill of spiritual knowledge to rapidly progress in our ultimate goal of self enlightenment. It is not the amount of money that we make which makes us happy but it is the amount of internal satisfaction we get what makes us happy. So it is a must that we keep our AURA strong and positive to achieve this internal satisfaction. It is said that, " we want more of every thing in life and what ever is there with us is considered less". So when you achieve more it becomes less. We should not fall into the trap of endless MORE. We in the present age of Kali Yuga we are more fortunate as the spread and sharing of information is much faster and open. In spiritual science the fundamentals have remained the same for hundreds of centuries, but in the present time this knowledge is analyzed and brought into a correct perspective. It is great to note that Buddha had achieved enlightenment in a short span of six years (he started at the age of 30 years on the path of enlightenment and achieved it in the 36th year). In this vein of great spiritual help is included the modern Orgonite technology, which is evolving rapidly and should be considered a new spiritual tool for the age of Kali Yuga.

TOC Office or Classroom "Less" than Positive? Try an Orgone HHG

By Rev. Ted Stretmoyer MscD

Is the atmosphere or energy of the individuals in your office or classroom less than positive? Try bringing in an Orgone HHG. My wife worked in a very negative local public office. We constructed an HHG in a pyramid shape and enhanced it with pyrite, amethyst, rough rubies, and tiny Herkimer diamonds. As an avid needlepoint crafter, she covered it with plastic canvas needle worked with gold yarn and laced with gold metal threads in a pattern resembling bricks. She took the newly created design to the office and placed it on her front office desk. She called it her new paperweight. The office where she worked employed individuals full of prejudice and negativity. The foremost offender was the boss. This was a public service office that routinely brought in customers with less than positive attitudes. On the first morning that she placed this special "paperweight" on her desk, it was impossible for anyone passing near to leave it alone. The "boss" found it impossible to remain in the office for longer than 5 or 10 minutes at a time before coming up with a reason to leave. His normal practice was to remain in the office for a couple of hours each day before leaving to oversee the field employees. All others that entered the office, including customers could not stop picking up the paperweight and were hard pressed to let it go. Those co-workers that were somewhat less negative than the boss had immediate attitude adjustments and were more positive than they had ever been during the two-year period that my wife had been in the office. My wife found that she had to almost keep a wary eye on the visiting customers because they tended to hold and caress the paperweight lovingly to the point that she wondered if they might not be able to leave it behind when they left. Through the following months, the "boss" continued in his new practice of staying in the office for 10 to 15 minute intervals before finding an immediate reason to leave. While in the office his temperament was much more moderate, although somewhat confused. This vibration change remained within the office through the remainder of her employment until she resigned to work out of the house with me. Unbeknownst to her employer, the HHG remains up in the ceiling rafters above the dropped ceiling in the front office – a little parting gift for those left behind. Since that experience, we have created numerous HHGs for family and friends – all enhanced with different minerals and crystals based upon what we feel that person or family most needs to improve their life experience. A listing of the Metaphysical Properties of many stones and minerals can be found at http://www.MythnLynx.com/MP.html . Get creative, color your resin or add unique enhancements and give your HHG creations away to family and friends. For those friends and family who are less than ready intellectually to accept the benefits of Orgone energy, you can call these creations paperweights or art objects and even if they think you are a little odd, they love you and it is your creation after all, so they have to put the gift somewhere in their house. Even if they only drag it out onto the coffee table when they know you are visiting, at least you know when you leave it is still doing it's job as it sits on a closet shelf or elsewhere in the home.

TOC An American Medical Doctor's Experience with HHGs

by Anonymous

Here's my story about starting to make these things; (if you should find some literary use for it and want to reprint it, feel free, but please don't attach my name - because I'm in the medical field, I must for the time being be discrete about my interest in Radionics, forbidden therapies, etc.): My family home is in a place that has had some sporadic haunting, and generally has a dark, malevolent energy to it. Visitors tend to have nightmares, and there is an odd tree (not a native species, planted by early settlers) that always seemed to be at the center of the problem. After a visit to littlemountainsmudge.com, I visited a local machine shop for aluminum shavings, bought a gallon of resin at the auto shop, and threw together an HHG. The remaining DTs (double terminated quartz crystals) I had lying around yielded 5 TBs. While they were curing, I charged them with the intention of dispelling anything evil, and filling their environment with a lush, life-giving energy (this was an interesting experience; it felt like they were drawing energy out of the sky, through my body, while they were charging). I let them sit, but felt like they were calling me from my shop: "We're ready! Put us to work!". So I put the HHG under the evil tree that night, and scattered the TBs at the edges of the property. A few minutes later I felt a palpable churning, turbulent energy; it was "crumbly," like some spectral energy-structure was breaking up and swirling around in chunks, being digested. Next I felt like something was screaming at me in rage, muffled, from the other side of barrier, and I got a whopping episode of tinnitus (which I never get ordinarily) which lasted about three minutes. In an hour or so, everything calmed down, but the energy level was extremely high; the next day, I went out to my car and saw a blue heron on a branch directly over one of the TBs - I've never seen one on the place in over 30 years. Now -three weeks later- there is a very happy, upbeat vibe to the area, and the wildlife keeps coming to investigate. I've started paying more attention to my health, and have regained an interest in making art and music that I'd sort of set aside in my preoccupation with career goals. Overall, I've entered an energetic, productive phase after installing these devices. Needless to say, I'm going to continue experimenting and learning about all of this.

TOC My experience and facts about HHGs and comparison with ancient Hindu traditions

by Bhagwath Reddy

In Hindu temples when deities are first installed, the time is very critical or very important. A very auspicious time is noted which is very good as per Astrological charts. After the entire deity is installed the deity is given prana prathista meaning giving life to the deity. This is done by reciting the vedic chants and doing different rituals. The ingredients used in the process were tried in making our HHG's which considerably enhanced their power. I definitely believe with Jon that the power of the HHG's will greatly depend on the time and type of thought/charge at the time of casting. I did a experiment by charging the Orgonite at the time of casting with chants. Then I gave the HHG to my mother to meditate on it without telling her about charging. So when my mother meditated with it she could hear the chants.

I consider all religious places of the world have one thing in common - they are energy accumulation centers and they tend to have very similar pyramidal or dome shapes on their tops. The temples also have energy grids or patterns inside the temple, which usually enhance the power. So I tried using these energy grid patterns in building HHGs, which has enhanced the power of the HHGs.

Another important observation I have made is that the location of these structures or temples play an important role, that is the reason we see some become famous and some don't though they have the same deity. The other thing I observed was they have bells and I feel the ringing of bells has a powerful effect on our mind and it helps in enhancing the meditative effects. The presently sold meditative CDs which change brain wave patterns have bell ringing sounds. Some frequencies play a predominant role in creating and spreading positive energies in the places we live. Here again, if we charge HHGs with these frequencies, then they absorb these energies and resonate continuously for long periods of time. This creates a strong positive effect in the area of the HHG.

The science behind HHGs has evolved for one fundamental reason. Namely, how to improve your AURA by external things or products surrounding /adjacent to you, other than the normal traditional methods like Rekei, Pranic healing, Sidda, Sahaja Yoga etc., which primarily depend on the internal efforts of a person . The combination of the two techniques is more powerful and effective.

All the spiritual sages say that each living being has and emits lots of electromagnetic waves. These are generated by our cells and are predominantly emitted by our nervous system and our brain. As thoughts from your mind flow through out your body, if you have good thoughts your AURA is good and if the thoughts are bad then your AURA will become bad. This happens over a period of time, and requires some time to reverse the process. The AURA of a person can be changed to good over a period of time, and Orgonite HHGs play a definitive role in speeding up the process.

Hi Jon, This is my latest creation, The VOD (Vibrational Orgonite Device). It came to me in a dream. What do you think?
I was shown this device with the large Coil on top of the Copper tubes and the tubes molded into the Orgonite. The Coil would cause a vibration that would go down through the Copper Tubes. The energy from the vibrating coil stimulates the Orgonite and the energy from the Orgonite goes back up through the Copper tubes and into the four Crystals that are the top of the Copper tubes. I programmed the intent for anti chemtrails, normal weather and protection from evil forces.
Since this last week after the Orgonite pour, the chemtrails have been very light or have faded away. As an added experiment I made a paste of headache pain pills and brushed it on the Orgonite base. I programmed it with intent to prevent the bad headaches my wife and I get. Since then We haven't had any headaches.

I Love the direction you are going with this, Alan. I would think that adjusting the height of the smaller coil would act as a Radionic tuning adjustment if needed, adapting the output of the device for different conditions. I remember a man named Harry Chambers was working on a similar idea with a modified Chembuster a few years ago. You might be able to get in touch with him over the web, as he is a member of many yahoo groups. Please keep us posted, - Editor

TOC Spurling Rings and other things

by ZSL

Spurling's rings are not mobius coils. Slim says that he started with mobius coils but he was "guided" to make Tensor Coils. I believe that the use of silver and then gold coatings over the copper wire is key to the tensor fields (gravitic) superconductivity. I believe mobius coils generate scalar or Orgone beams in the fourth dimension and tensor fields are fifth dimensional. The ability of the volleyball sized harmonizer spheres to generate 2500 mile diameter fields indicates fifth dimensional energy levels. Having met Slim in Issaquah at the end of May, I feel his auric field is fifth dimensionally augmented. His IQ is well over 200. Not much gets past him. Tensor math is the type of math James Clerk Maxwell used in his electromagnetic equations of 1859 and was later dumbed down by Oliver Heavyside in 1880.

If constructing tensor rings, use the left handed spiral. With mobius coils either left or right handed spirals of the copper wires will generate scalar energy. Tensor fields are far stronger and could be dangerous. On May 30 I discussed the ability of his coils to transmute dark Orgone into light or in dowser's terms "Render it formless and harmless to the universe." One of the gold plated coils had broken through a dark energy block. I could feel an "hourglass shaped double vortex" in the coil. It had more than enough energy to transmute DOR into Healthy Orgone. Fifth dimensional fields can change fourth and third dimensional structures. In my Melchizedek training the fifth dimensional energies are "Tri-Magnetic" and the a Spurling Ring which combines third, fourth and fifth dimensional energies was called "Trizonnic" (three zones, three tones). Also the speed of light is far quicker in a tensor field than in a scalar field. The speed of light of a scalar beam is such that communications to stars up to about 40 light years would be instantaneous. The speed of light of a tensor beam would make galactic communications instantaneous, or nearly so.

Slim Spurling has been consulting with Dr. Hartmutt-Muller of St Petersburg Russia about Tensor fields. It appears that the Russian has put together a tensor technology for cell phone communications and will be signing a contract with a communications company soon. Hopefully the technology will see the light of day. Jon, please pass this on.

Hi ZSL, Actually I'll go you one better and print it in the letters section of the eZine. With a scalar mobe there is a 5D input through the mind of the user, but I agree it is more a 4D effect that is generated the mobius coil itself. Myself, I haven't played much with the tensor rings though I do use the concept here and there as a lens to focus the output of a 4D discharge on some Orgone generator / modulators I make. Thanks for the info, and keep in touch - Editor

TOC Measurement Question

by Peter Grandics

Do you have any quantitative measurement on the Orgone production using vacor tubes or anything else by the Orgone Field Pulser?

©2005 Peter Grandics

Hi Peter,

There is as of yet no standardized method of measurement where Orgone is concerned. Perhaps when I have more time and funds to invest in researching measurement devices I will produce my own. In the meantime, I use a combination of the study of symptoms on plants, animals and people, the success or failure of manifestation attempts, my own ability to see and feel subtle energy fields, dowsing, and other methods. I also do a fair amount of remote viewing as an intrinsic part of the design and evaluation process. There are several gadgets on the market in the 3 hundred to a thousand dollar range that measure 'energy', but imo none of them are really quite dependable just yet. The one built by James Demeo looks good as an example of its kind (measures the aspect of Orgone that I refer to as charge density, judging by the method of operating the device that he describes), as does the Egeley Wheel. IMO any decent measurement system would need at least 3 values, producing an indexed number. measurements of flow rate, charge density and polarity. I do exchange info with a few other guys who are working on similar devices, and look forward to seeing this aspect of orgonomy move forward in the next few years. Some of the computerized Radionics gear in the 20k+ range shows the potential to be useful in this also, but right now I don't have the coin to invest. Check back with me in ten years and ask that same question again ;) - Editor

NEXT ISSUE - Water and Energy

In the next issue of Modern Orgone, we will explore in-depth the relationship between water and Orgone.

Learn how to charge your drinking water for added vitality, use water to carry Radionic data, make your own homeopathic remedies, and more. We will discuss what makes common water able to store a bioenergy charge, how this affects the water, and why this information is relevant to everyone on Earth. Energy affects water in subtle but powerful ways.

Did you know that water can be toxic to your body even if there are no measurable chemical toxins to be found within it? Find out more in the next issue of Modern Orgone Electronic Magazine, coming soon!

BONUS

Bonus Article - Surprise! While doing the final editing of this issue, I received an email from Kevin Smith, bringing the following article to my attention. Since it fits in so well with ZSL's letter above, (and since Kevin has been nagging me to read up on electric universe theory for months now) we thought it would be an excellent bonus addition to this issue of Modern Orgone, and Wallace Thornhill generously agreed. -Editor

TOC Martian "Blueberries" in the Lab

by Wallace Thornhill

Plasma physicist uses electric arcs to replicate the mysterious spherules on the Red Planet

On January 25, 2004, the Mars Rover "Opportunity" landed in a small crater on the Martian plain called Meridiani Planum. A few days later, Opportunity photographed a sight that could alter our ideas about the recent history of the solar system: Scattered around the walls of the crater were BB-sized spherules. Their blue-gray color set them apart from the reddish hue of the iron-rich Martian soil and suggested a name for them—blueberries.

The left half of the picture above shows these Martian blueberries at different magnifications. They are embedded in what appears to be fused layers of soil that are exposed on the margins of the crater.

As Opportunity rolled further across the Martian landscape, it found a profusion of blueberries. Investigative team members speculated that countless numbers of the spherules lie embedded in the Martian soil. Over time, erosion has exposed large numbers of them and has left many lying on the surface.

After spectroscopic analysis, the Martian spherules were identified as "hematite concretions". Hematite is an iron-rich mineral and is the primary constituent of the soil surrounding the blueberries. Geologists surmised that they are Martian counterparts of terrestrial concretions, which are commonly believed to have formed through water-induced mineral leakage. But this only widens the mystery. Theories about the formative processes of concretions are little more than untested guesses. No geologist has seen a concretion being made or has made one in a laboratory—or has disproved a competing theory. (But geologists have shown that the more a guess is repeated, the more it's apt to be called a fact.)

For many years Electric Universe theorists have proposed that concretions be examined for evidence of formation through electric discharge. In our Picture of the Day for August 27, 2004, Blueberries on Mars, we compared the Martian spherules to hematite concretions from Texas and "Moqui balls" from Utah. We gave several reasons for investigating the possible electrical origins of concretions, geodes, and other mysterious spherical geologic forms.

The conventional theories, we noted, are based exclusively on chemistry and mechanics. But there is another phenomenon that produces spheres—electric discharge. In the plasma lab, electric arcs create tiny spheres that are often hollow, such as the hematite concretions seen above. Electric discharge tends to produce spherical layering and a distinct equator and pole, because the electromagnetic force "squeezes" perpendicular to the current that creates it. These characteristics are also found in the "natural" spherules. The Moqui balls pictured here (lower left) have both equatorial bulges and polar markings. Rock-cutters recommend that you will get a better display from a geode if you first locate the equator and poles, then cut across the poles.

Even before this Picture of the Day was written, the plasma physicist CJ Ransom, of Vemasat Laboratories, had set up an experiment to test the electrical explanation of concretions and Martian blueberries. He obtained a quantity of hematite and blasted it with an electric arc. The results are seen in the right half of the image above. The embedded spheres created by the arc appear to replicate many of the features of the blueberries on Mars. No other laboratory process has achieved a similar result. It should encourage further experiments using higher energies.

Dr. Ransom's experimental work has laid a foundation for a radical reassessment of planetary geology. If concretions can only be replicated by electric discharge, we can no longer view them—or the strata in which they appear—through the lens of prior theory. (See tomorrow's Picture of the Day for more on concretions.)

In the matter at hand (hematite concretions), the direct evidence will be difficult to ignore. Dr C.J. Ransom's and Wallace Thornhill's paper on the laboratory-generated spherules will be presented at the national meeting of the American Physical Society, in Tampa Florida, April 17, 2005.
